A. EEOC reasonably believed it satisfied Title VII's pre-suit requirements before filing suit.

Before filing suit seeking relief for Starke and other women, EEOC investigated whether CRST's conduct subjected Starke and other women to a violation of Title VII, found reasonable cause to believe it did, and offered CRST an opportunity to conciliate this class claim. In its opening brief, EEOC argued that it reasonably believed this conduct satisfied Title VII's statutory prerequisites for a lawsuit seeking relief for multiple victims of the same type of Title VII violation.[6] EEOC-Brf at 62-78.

Thus, EEOC has not "conceded that it did not satisfy Title VII's pre-suit requirements for any of the

6. Had CRST provided EEOC with the information EEOC requested at the outset of the Starke investigation or had CRST joined EEOC in trying to conciliate the charge in this case, claimants would have been identified during investigation or conciliation and CRST might have made changes to its practices that could have prevented future harassment. See EEOC-Brf at 11-14. But because CRST withheld requested information and then rejected the opportunity to identify claimants before suit was filed—declining to conciliate for reasons unrelated to the conciliation process EEOC outlined—identification of claimants came during discovery, as is usually the case when respondents refuse to discuss relief for anyone other than the initial charging party. See, e.g., EEOC v. Bruno's Rest., 13 F.3d at 289 (EEOC reasonably believed its pattern or practice conciliation efforts sufficient where defendant was unwilling to engage in discussion of individual charge).

'claims' dismissed on summary judgment other than those on behalf of" Starke and Peeples, nor has EEOC "admitted that it did nothing before filing this lawsuit to investigate, find reasonable cause, and conciliate" with respect to 152 of the 154 women identified in EEOC's lawsuit, as CRST wrongly asserts. E.g. CRST-Brf at 58, 59, 63-64 (internal quotation marks added). CRST bases these supposed concessions on EEOC's alleged failure to address in its opening brief one portion of the district court's fee decision. See CRST-Brf at 58-59 (quoting district court's fee award, R.400, at A-319 n.9). The district court reasoned that nothing short of EEOC's individual identification of each alleged victim and EEOC's separate investigation, issuance of reasonable cause determination, and conciliation would have satisfied Title VII's pre-suit requirements in a case like this. See CRST-Brf at 58-59. This was the same rationale on which the district court based its August 2009 dismissal order, A-185-224.

The court's factual statement that EEOC did not conduct separate, individual investigations nor separately conciliate the individual allegations of each alleged victim is correct, but EEOC does not concede that this amounts to a failure to satisfy Title VII's pre-suit requirements. Rather, as EEOC argued below and in its opening brief, based on existing judicial precedent, when EEOC filed this lawsuit, it reasonably believed it had undertaken all of the steps that Title VII requires and was not required to identify every potential victim before filing suit. See EEOC-Brf at 62-78.

CRST concedes that "EEOC may properly sue on behalf of the entire class affected by company-wide or workplace discrimination or harassment uncovered in EEOC's investigation without having investigated each individual's claim." Id. at 62. CRST states that such lawsuits could properly include a claim that multiple female workers were sexually harassed, where the harassment was either by the same alleged harassers or in a common workplace. CRST-Brf at 61-62 & cases cited in nn.15&16. CRST further concedes that EEOC is not required to identify all of the victims (i.e., claimants) during the administrative process. Id. at 62.

CRST nevertheless argues that EEOC had no reasonable grounds to be surprised by the outcome of the first appeal. CRST asserts that this Court did not create a "new legal rule" but simply applied the holding in EEOC v. Delight Wholesale Co., 973 F.2d 664 (8th Cir. 1992), that "an EEOC lawsuit is not confined to the specific allegations in the charge" so long as "the additional allegations of discrimination are included in the reasonable cause determination and subject to a conciliation proceeding." See CRST-Brf at 60 (citing A-275, which quotes Delight Wholesale, 973 F.3d at 668).

What CRST fails to explain is how the line of cases CRST noted in its brief (at 61 & nn. 15 & 16), or the facts of this case, should have alerted EEOC that the standard rule—that EEOC is permitted to seek relief for a class without first investigating each individual's separate allegations, CRST-Brf at 62—would not apply here. CRST notes the district court's observation that CRST's workplaces "are largely the cabs of hundreds of semi-truck tractors." CRST-Brf at 62 (citing A-66). But until this Court issued its divided ruling in the first appeal, there was no authority suggesting that the isolated location of harassment incidents compels different EEOC administrative requirements.

CRST argues that its non-unified workplace—the separate cabs of individual trucks—means that the harassment allegation of one female driver "provides no basis for concluding that CRST violated Title VII with respect to other female drivers allegedly harassed by other male drivers on other trucks at different times and places." CRST-Brf at 62-63. But a claim that CRST violated Title VII is not based on what a male harasser did. Liability for workplace harassment is based on an employer's failure to take the steps required by Title VII to prevent and remedy harassment. Cf. EEOC v. Dial Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d at 946-47 (company practice of tolerating sexual harassment forms basis for pattern or practice liability).

EEOC's lawsuit addressed whether CRST's preventive and remedial responses to the complaints of female drivers were adequate, and EEOC reasonably believed the existing rule concerning lawsuits seeking class relief, see CRST-Brf at 61 & nn. 15 & 16, applied to its pre-suit efforts. CRST offers no explanation of why this belief was unreasonable.

B. The court's ruling that EEOC failed to satisfy Title VII's presuit requirements was not a ruling on the merits and, therefore, CRST is not a prevailing party with respect to that ruling.

The district court also erred as a matter of law in awarding fees because the ruling on which CRST primarily prevailed and which was the sole basis on which the district court initially awarded fees to CRST—that the EEOC failed to satisfy Title VII's presuit requirements—does not go to the merits of EEOC's Title VII claim against CRST. Rather, it is a procedural ruling that does not address, at all, the substance of EEOC's claim that CRST failed to prevent and remedy workplace sexual harassment. Such a ruling does not constitute the type of merits-related decision that this Court held, in Marquart, is necessary to warrant according a Title VII defendant the status of "prevailing party."

In Marquart, this Court explained that a defendant is not a "prevailing" party for purposes of Title VII's fee-shifting provision unless two conditions are met: a judicial determination on the merits of the plaintiff's case and, in addition, a judicial determination that the plaintiff's case was frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless. Marquart, 26 F.3d at 851-52. Absent these two conditions, a Title VII defendant is not a "prevailing party" for purposes of awarding fees, even if the defendant has succeeded in bringing the plaintiff's lawsuit to an end.

No such ruling on the merits occurred here with respect to Monika Starke or the 67 women for whom, the district court ruled, the EEOC presented actionable claims of a Title VII violation. To the contrary, CRST failed to move for summary judgment with respect to 32 women, and the district court rejected CRST's merits-based motions with respect to another 35 women. Further, this Court rejected CRST's merits-based contentions with respect to Jones.

The only reason the court dismissed EEOC's lawsuit after finding that EEOC alleged actionable harassment with respect to 67 women was the court's conclusion that EEOC had failed to undertake certain administrative steps that Title VII requires before EEOC can file suit. The court mistakenly concluded that demonstrating satisfaction of Title VII's presuit conditions is an "ingredient" of EEOC's Title VII claim. Analogizing to a Supreme Court decision addressing Title VII's requirement that an employer have a minimum of fifteen employees to be covered by the Act, the court concluded that its ruling that EEOC failed to satisfy Title VII's presuit requirements fell within Marquart's requirement of a ruling on the merits. See R.400 at 20 (citing Arbaugh v. Y&H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 516 (2006) (Title VII's employeenumerosity requirement "is an element of a plaintiff's claim for relief, not a jurisdictional issue")).

The district court erred. Arbaugh is inapposite, because Title VII's presuit conditions are very different from Title VII's employee-numerosity provision. The latter distinguishes employers who are subject to Title VII's prohibitions from those who are not. In other words, if an employer does not meet the statute's numerosity requirements, there is no possible claim because such an employer cannot violate Title VII. Consequently, whether an employer has sufficient employees to be covered under Title VII is properly viewed as an element of a plaintiff's claim for relief, regardless of whether the plaintiff is the EEOC or a private employee.

Whether a plaintiff has satisfied Title VII's presuit requirements, on the other hand, presents a very different question. A plaintiff (either a private plaintiff or the EEOC) asserting a claim of sexual harassment under Title VII must demonstrate that the employer is covered under the Act and the factual elements of the claim. A private plaintiff can file suit under Title VII only if she filed a timely charge with EEOC alleging sexual harassment and then filed her lawsuit within 90 days of receiving an EEOC right-to-sue notice. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(b), (e)(1), (f)(1); McSherry v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 81 F.3d 739, 740 n.3 (8th Cir. 1996) (per curiam). Satisfaction of those statutory presuit requirements is not, however, an element of the plaintiff's discrimination claim. See Rester v. Stephens Media, LLC, --- F.3d ---, 2014 WL 103968, at *2 n.2 (8th Cir. Jan. 13, 2014) (distinguishing between merits of a claim and satisfaction of Title VII presuit requirements); McSherry, 81 F.3d at 740-41 (plaintiff's claim under Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), which incorporates Title VII's procedural requirements, accrued upon plaintiff's termination by employer even though plaintiff had not yet received his EEOC right-to-sue notice).

As this Court explained in McSherry, although the EEOC right-to-sue letter is a statutory prerequisite to suit, it does not "create a claim." Rather, an employee's receipt of a right-to-sue notice is merely a step that must occur before the employee can pursue the claim in court. Id. at 740-41; see also Sanchez v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 659 F.3d 671, 675 (8th Cir. 2011) (plaintiff's ADA claim accrued when employer rescinded plaintiff's promotion, not when EEOC issued right-to-sue notice); Holcombe v. U.S. Airways, Inc., 369 Fed. App'x 424, 428 (4th Cir. 2010) (EEOC right-to-sue notice is "a procedural requirement" that "does not give rise to the [plaintiff's] ADA claim).[13]

Likewise, Title VII requires EEOC to issue a reasonable cause finding and attempt conciliation before filing any lawsuit—not just one claiming sexual harassment. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(b), (f)(1). Nevertheless, although these administrative steps are a presuit requirement, they are not "elements" of an EEOC claim of sexual harassment or of any other Title VII violation. They do not distinguish which employers are subject to Title VII, nor whether an employer has violated Title VII, but only whether the case has undergone the type of pre-litigation process that Congress intended before EEOC is free to file a lawsuit, i.e., a process that gives employers an opportunity to resolve a dispute short of litigation.

13. In McSherry, this Court mistakenly referred to Title VII presuit requirements as "jurisdictional." See 81 F.3d at 741. This Court, however, has clarified that Title VII's statutory presuit requirements are not jurisdictional in nature. See Rester, 2014 WL 103968, at *2 n.2.

Indeed, the procedural steps Title VII imposes may be accomplished in ways that can differ markedly from case to case. See EEOC v. Mach Mining, LLC, --- F.3d ---, 2013 WL 6698515, at *4 n.2 (7th Cir. Dec. 20, 2013). They are also largely (and properly) shielded from judicial review. See EEOC v. Caterpillar, Inc., 409 F.3d 831, 833 (7th Cir. 2005) (no judicial review of EEOC reasonable cause determination); Borg-Warner Protective Servs. Corp. v. EEOC, 245 F.3d 831, 834-35 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (same); Georator Corp. v. EEOC, 592 F.2d 765, 767-69 (4th Cir. 1979) (same); Mach Mining, 2013 WL 6698515, at *3-12 (holding Title VII contains no affirmative defense for failure to conciliate based, in part, on express statutory language making clear that conciliation is an informal process entrusted to the EEOC's discretion which is not amenable to judicial review).

The distinction in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure between what is required in a complaint with respect to the elements of a claim and the conditions precedent for bringing that claim further supports the conclusion that satisfying conditions precedent is not an "ingredient" of a claim. Under Rule 8, a plaintiff's complaint must include "a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) (emphasis added); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (complaint must contain sufficient factual content to permit reasonable inference that defendant is liable for misconduct alleged).

Conditions precedent—such as Title VII's administrative prerequisites to suit—are not included in this requirement, however. Instead, under Rule 9, "it suffices to allege generally that all conditions precedent have occurred or been performed." Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(c); EEOC v. Klingler Elec. Corp., 636 F.2d 104, 106-07 (5th Cir. 1981) (per curiam). Only if the defendant's answer denies "with particularity" that a condition precedent occurred or has been performed is a plaintiff required to offer details to demonstrate the condition was satisfied. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(c). This statement of separate pleading standards for claims versus conditions precedent reinforces the conclusion that establishing that EEOC satisfied its statutory presuit requirements is not an "ingredient" of EEOC's Title VII claim against CRST.

This conclusion is reinforced by the fact that many courts, upon finding that EEOC failed to satisfy one or more of Title VII's presuit steps, have stayed the case to allow the Commission to complete the step. See, e.g., EEOC v. Evans Fruit Co., Inc., 872 F. Supp. 2d 1107, 1116-17 (E.D. Wash. 2012); EEOC v. Crye-Leike, Inc., 800 F. Supp. 2d 1009 (E.D. Ark. 2011); EEOC v. McGee Bros. Co., 2011 WL 1542148, at *7 (W.D.N.C. Apr. 21, 2011); EEOC v. Die Fliedermaus, 77 F. Supp. 2d 460, 467-68 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).

As the Seventh Circuit recently noted, this is really the only appropriate remedy when a defendant complains of insufficient process; a stay to permit further conciliation cures the alleged deficiency, and there is "no sound basis for dismissing a case on the merits." Mach Mining, 2013 WL 6698515, at *12.

Even courts that have dismissed an EEOC's lawsuit rather than stay the case to permit further conciliation have ordinarily dismissed "without prejudice." See, e.g., EEOC v. Swissport Fueling, Inc., 916 F. Supp. 2d 1005, 1044 (D. Ariz. 2013) (dismissing without prejudice twenty-one claimants not identified until after EEOC filed suit); EEOC v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 490 F. Supp. 1245, 1247, 1253, 1254-58 (M.D. Ala. 1980).

The "primary meaning of 'dismissal without prejudice' . . . is dismissal without barring plaintiff from returning later, to the same court, with the same underlying claim." Semtek Int'l Inc. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 531 U.S. 497, 505 (2001). Thus, dismissal without prejudice permits the EEOC, if it chooses, to complete the missing procedural step(s) and re-file suit, a point at least one court expressly noted. See, e.g., EEOC v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., Civ. No. 79-cv-5708, 1980 WL 180, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y. June 16, 1980) ("The EEOC will not be stymied by a dismissal of this action without prejudice. The commission can institute this action again providing it does so properly."). In contrast, if the EEOC (or any plaintiff) fails to establish an element of its claim, the case is properly dismissed with prejudice. See, e.g., Davenport v. Riverview Gardens Sch. Dist., 30 F.3d 940, 945-46 (8th Cir. 1994) (affirming summary judgment because, although plaintiff's evidence sufficed on other elements of his discrimination claim, he failed to offer sufficient evidence of pretext).

As all of these authorities indicate, EEOC's administrative presuit steps are not an "ingredient" of a Title VII claim. Therefore, the district court's dismissal here on the ground that EEOC failed to complete presuit administrative steps for individuals other than Starke was not a ruling on the merits of EEOC's underlying Title VII claim. If not for this non-merits ruling, EEOC would have proceeded to trial on its claim that CRST failed to prevent and/or remedy effectively the sexual harassment experienced by 69 women. Under Marquart, CRST is not the "prevailing defendant" under these circumstances. The district court erred in concluding that "dismissal of claims due to the EEOC's failure to satisfy its presuit obligations is a dismissal on the merits of the EEOC's claims." A-314.

II. CRST is Not Entitled to Fees Because EEOC's Lawsuit Was Not Frivolous, Unreasonable, or Without Foundation.

Even if CRST is deemed a prevailing party here, it is not entitled to fees because EEOC's lawsuit was not "frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation" as required for a fee award to a prevailing defendant.

First, although EEOC did not prevail in its argument that this was a pattern-or-practice case, EEOC's position was not frivolous or unreasonable.[18] Second, even if EEOC's position were frivolous or unreasonable, CRST would have incurred these defense fees anyway.

The court's only explanation for imposing fees on EEOC based on the pattern-or-practice issue was its reference to its April 30, 2009, Order (A-1) rejecting EEOC's pattern-or-practice argument. See A-318 (citing pages 57-67 of R.197). That decision explains the court's ruling on the merits of CRST's motion for summary judgment on EEOC's pattern-or-practice "claim," but it does not address, at all, whether EEOC's attempt to pursue the case under a pattern-or-practice framework was "frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation" under Christiansburg. The court's reliance on its prior order, without more, strongly suggests it imposed fees

18. EEOC's one-count complaint does not include a "pattern-or-practice claim." See I-Apx.40. During discovery, EEOC advised the court and CRST that this was a pattern-or-practice case that EEOC proposed to litigate using the proof paradigm and bifurcated trial model of Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977). See, e.g., I-Apx.66 (transcript of 11/12/2008 motion hearing) at I-Apx.72, 74. The court denied EEOC's motion for a bifurcated trial, stating EEOC had waited too long to seek this change in trial proceedings.,III-Apx.770. The court thereafter granted CRST's motion for summary judgment and ruled that EEOC could not use the burden-shifting framework at trial. A-1 (4/30/2009). Among other things, the court reasoned that the proportion of women complaining of sexual harassment was insufficient to demonstrate that tolerating harassment was CRST's regular course of business. A-57-63.

on the EEOC on the ground that because EEOC lost, the claim must have been unreasonable—the very post hoc reasoning that the Supreme Court condemned in Christiansburg. See Christiansburg, 434 U.S. at 421-22; Marquart, 26 F.3d at 849.

More importantly, the fact that it took the court sixty-seven pages to explain why it was rejecting EEOC's request to use a pattern-or-practice method of proof is probably the strongest evidence that EEOC's argument was not frivolous. This Court has held that a court should not award fees to a Title VII defendant if there was "some basis" to support the plaintiff's claim, even though that evidence was ultimately unavailing.

ORDER OF DISMISSAL

Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") and defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") having filed a Joint Motion To Dismiss;

This Court having originally entered Judgment in this case on October 1, 2009, in favor of CRST;

That Judgment having been affirmed in part and reversed in part on May 8, 2012, by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, with rehearing and rehearing en banc denied on June 8, 2012;

Appendix D

The Court of Appeals in its May 8, 2012 decision having vacated, without prejudice, this Court's February 9, 2010 award of attorney's fees and costs to CRST;

The Court of Appeals also having remanded EEOC's claims on behalf of Tillie Jones and Monika Starke for trial;

The Eighth Circuit's mandate having issued on September 14, 2012;

EEOC having withdrawn its claim on behalf of Tillie Jones on October 11, 2012, on the ground that it was barred by this Court's Order of August 13, 2009 [ECF Docket No. 263]; and

The parties having entered into an agreement settling EEOC's claim on behalf of Monika Starke pursuant to the terms set forth in the Settlement Agreement attached as Exhibit 1 to the Joint Motion To Dismiss and also attached to this Order as Exhibit 1 and incorporated by reference herein,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED AND ADJUDGED that:

1. Based on EEOC's withdrawal of its claim on behalf of Tillie Jones, the parties' settlement of EEOC's claim on behalf of Monika Starke, and the mandate issued by the Court of Appeals on September 14, 2012, with respect to all other claims asserted by EEOC, this case is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.

2. This Order is entered without prejudice to CRST's motion for an award of attorney's fees and costs, as set forth in Exhibit 1 to this Order.

3. CRST shall file its bill of costs and its motion for an award of attorney's fees and costs, along with a brief and supporting documents, twenty-eight (28) days after the entry of this Order; EEOC shall have twenty-eight (28) days thereafter to file an opposing brief and documents supporting its opposition; and CRST shall have fourteen (14) days thereafter to file a reply brief.

4. The Clerk shall enter Judgment in accordance with this Order.

SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

This Settlement Agreement ("Agreement") is made by and between Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") and CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") (together referred to as the "Parties").

WHEREAS, EEOC brought a lawsuit against CRST in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa, Cedar Rapids Division, entitled Equal Employment Opportunity Commission v. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., Case No. 1:07-cv-0095-LRR, in which it sought injunctive relief as well as monetary damages;

WHEREAS, the District Court dismissed all claims and entered judgment for CRST on October 1, 2009, and thereafter awarded attorney's fees and costs to CRST in a judgment entered on February 9, 2010;

WHEREAS, on EEOC's appeal of those judgments, on May 8, 2012, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed except for EEOC's claims on behalf of Monika Starke and Tillie Jones, which were remanded to the District Court for further proceedings, and vacated the award of attorney's fees and costs without prejudice;

WHEREAS, on remand, on October 11, 2012, EEOC withdrew its claim on behalf of Tillie Jones on the ground that it was barred by this Court's Order of August 13, 2009 [ECF Docket No. 263];

Appendix D

WHEREAS, the Parties now wish to settle EEOC's claim on behalf of Ms. Starke;

NOW, THEREFORE, for the mutual consideration stated herein, the Parties agree as follows:

1. CRST shall pay $50,000 (Fifty-Thousand Dollars) in settlement of EEOC's claim on behalf of Ms. Starke. Within thirty (30) days of execution of this Agreement, CRST shall send a check in that amount by certified mail as reasonably directed by EEOC.

2. Within five (5) business days of execution of this Agreement, the Parties shall file a joint motion, in the form attached as Exhibit A hereto, to dismiss EEOC's claim on behalf of Ms. Starke with prejudice. A copy of this Agreement shall be filed as Exhibit 1 to the joint motion to dismiss and attached as Exhibit 1 to the order of dismissal.

3. This Agreement is a compromise resolution of disputed claims and defenses. By entering into this Agreement, neither EEOC nor CRST admits the claims or defenses of the other.

4. This Agreement does not preclude CRST from pursuing attorney's fees and costs pursuant to the Order of the Eighth Circuit dated May 8, 2012.

5. Further, this Agreement does not preclude either EEOC or CRST from making any arguments relating to CRST's pursuit of attorney's fees and costs, including arguments relating to whether EEOC or CRST is the prevailing party.

6. This Agreement constitutes the entire agreement between the Parties with respect to the matters addressed herein and supersedes all prior oral and written agreements with respect to those matters.

7. This Agreement shall not be modified except by a writing signed by both Parties.

IN WITNESS THEREOF, the Parties have executed this Agreement as of the dates indicated below.

OPINION

[TABLE OF CONTENTS INTENTIONALLY OMITTED]

I. INTRODUCTION

The matters before the court are the "Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Costs Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k)" ("Fees Motion") (docket no. 282) and the "Motion for Review of the Clerk's Taxation of Costs" ("Costs Motion") (docket no. 306) filed by Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST").

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS

A. Underlying Action

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") brought this case in its own name pursuant to Section 706, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5, of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. ("Title VII"). The EEOC filed suit on behalf of approximately 270 allegedly aggrieved women that it contended CRST subjected to sex discrimination in violation of Title VII. Ultimately, the EEOC made approximately 150 of the 270 allegedly aggrieved women available for deposition. Because the EEOC did not make the remaining women available to CRST for deposition, the court held that the EEOC could not seek relief for them.

In its complaint, the EEOC pled a violation of § 706. The EEOC did not plead a violation of § 707--the traditional vehicle used to assert a "pattern or practice" claim. As this case progressed, however, it became clear that the EEOC was asserting a "pattern or practice claim" against CRST. On April 30, 2009, the court entered an Order ("Pattern or Practice Order") (docket no. 197) in which it assumed that either: "(1) § 706 permit[ted] the EEOC to pursue a pattern or practice claim . . . or (2) the EEOC ha[d] constructively amended its complaint to assert a § 707 claim against CRST in this lawsuit in addition to its § 706 claim." Pattern or Practice Order at 26. With this assumption in mind, the court dismissed the EEOC's purported pattern or practice claim against CRST. See Pattern or Practice Order at 67 ("To the extent that the EEOC asserts a 'pattern or practice claim' in this litigation against CRST, such claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE.").

In rulings on a series of summary judgment motions, the court considered the merits of most of the approximately 150 allegedly aggrieved persons' allegations. Ultimately, the court held that CRST could not be held liable for the allegations of the majority of these women and barred the EEOC from seeking relief on their behalf at trial. See Orders at docket nos. 197, 223, 225, 251, 256 and 258. The court's disposition of these summary judgment motions left 67 allegedly aggrieved persons remaining in the EEOC's action.

On August 13, 2009, the court entered an Order ("Order on Motion to Show Cause") (docket no. 263) in which it dismissed the EEOC's Complaint because "the EEOC wholly abandoned its statutory duties as to the remaining 67 allegedly aggrieved persons in this case." Order on Motion to Show Cause at 31. Specifically, the court found that "the EEOC did not conduct any investigation of the specific allegations of the allegedly aggrieved persons for whom it seeks relief at trial before filing the Complaint--let alone issue a reasonable cause determination as to those allegations or conciliate them." Id. (emphasis in original). The court concluded that "[t]he EEOC's failure to investigate the claims of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons deprived CRST of a meaningful opportunity to engage in conciliation and foreclosed any possibility that the parties might settle all or some of this dispute without the expense of a federal lawsuit." Id. at 36. Consequently, the court barred the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons. In the Order, the court noted that CRST was a "prevailing party" and stated that "CRST may file an application for attorneys' fees from the EEOC[.]" Id. at 40. On October 1, 2009, the Clerk of Court entered Judgment (docket no. 279) in favor of CRST.

B. Fees and Costs

On October 16, 2009, CRST filed a Bill of Costs (docket no. 280). In its Bill of Costs, CRST sought $ 355,142.22 in costs incurred in this lawsuit. This amount included fees of the Clerk of Court, court reporter fees, witness fees and exemplification and copy fees. On October 30, 2009, CRST filed the Fees Motion. In the Fees Motion, CRST requested $ 7,633,397.77 in attorneys' fees and $ 569,564.64 in expenses that are not recoverable as "costs" under 28 U.S.C. § 1920.

On November 4, 2009, the EEOC filed a "Resistance to Defendant CRST's Bill of Costs" ("Bill of Costs Resistance") (docket no. 286).[1] On November 13, 2009, CRST filed a "Reply to EEOC's Resistance to Defendant CRST's Bill of Costs" ("Bill of Costs Reply") (docket no. 294).

On November 16, 2009, the EEOC filed a Resistance to the Fees Motion ("Fees Resistance") (docket no. 295). On November 30, 2009, CRST filed a Reply in support of the Fees Motion ("Fees Reply") (docket no. 300). In the Fees Reply, CRST also slightly reduced the amount it seeks in attorneys' fees from $ 7,633,397.77 to $ 7,624,546.47.

On December 1, 2009, the Clerk of Court ("Clerk") entered a "Taxation of Costs" (docket no. 303). The Clerk taxed costs in CRST's favor in the amount of $ 92,842.21. The Clerk denied $ 262,300.01 of CRST's claimed costs.

1. The EEOC originally filed a Resistance to CRST's Bill of Costs on November 2, 2009 (docket no. 285). However, at the request of CRST's counsel, the EEOC filed an amended version to make a minor clarification.

On December 8, 2009, CRST filed the Costs Motion. In the Costs Motion, CRST seeks $ 70,855.52 in costs for videotaping depositions, which the Clerk denied in the Taxation of Costs. On December 14, 2009, the EEOC filed a Resistance to the Costs Motion ("Costs Resistance") (docket no. 310). On December 18, 2009, CRST filed a Reply in support of the Costs Motion ("Costs Reply") (docket no. 312).

On December 22, 2009, CRST filed a "Supplemental Statement in Support of its Motion for Attorneys' Fees and Costs Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k)" ("Fees Supplement") (docket no. 315). In the Fees Supplement, CRST seeks to recover as part of its attorneys' fee award the remainder of its claimed expenses that the Clerk denied in the Taxation of Costs, in the amount of $ 176,444.79. CRST also seeks to recover $ 70,855.52 for videotaping depositions as part of the fee award, if the court declines to award this amount as a cost pursuant to the Costs Motion. In sum, CRST seeks $ 7,624,546.47 in attorneys' fees and $ 816,864.95 in expenses.

III. SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

On November 30, 2009, the EEOC filed a Notice of Appeal ("Notice") (docket no. 298). The Notice "divests [the court] of jurisdiction over aspects of the case that are the subject of the appeal." United States v. Queen, 433 F.3d 1076, 1077 (8th Cir. 2007) (per curiam). The amount of attorneys' fees and costs to award Plaintiffs is not a subject of the Notice. Accordingly, the court finds it has subject matter jurisdiction over the Motions. See, e.g., Lorenz v.

Valley Forge Ins. Co., 23 F.3d 1259, 1260-61 (7th Cir. 1994) (Easterbrook, J.) ("[C]osts are appealable separately from the merits; a district court may award costs even while the substantive appeal is pending."); Rothenberg v. Sec. Mgmt. Co., 677 F.2d 64, 64 (11th Cir. 1982) (same).

IV. COSTS

On October 16, 2009, CRST filed a Bill of Costs in which it sought $ 355,142.22 in costs. On December 1, 2009, the Clerk taxed costs against the EEOC and in favor of CRST's in the total amount of $ 92,842.21. The Clerk refused to tax costs in CRST's favor for its attorneys' pro hac vice fees, the costs related to videotaped depositions and fees for printing and/or copying.

A. Legal Background

In deciding an issue relating to costs, the court must consult both Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(d), which gives the court the power to tax "costs" to a prevailing party and 28 U.S.C. § 1920, which defines "costs." Crawford Fitting Co. v. J.T. Gibbons, Inc., 482 U.S. 437, 440, 107 S. Ct. 2494, 96 L. Ed. 2d 385 (1987). Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 54(d) provides that, "[u]nless a federal statute, these rules, or a court order provides otherwise, costs--other than attorney's fees--should be allowed to the prevailing party." Fed. R. Civ. P. 54(d)(1). "Rule 54 represents a codification of the presumption that the prevailing party is entitled to costs." Martin v. Daimler Chrysler Corp., 251 F.3d 691, 696 (8th Cir. 2001) (quotations omitted); see also Ex parte Peterson, 253 U.S.

300, 315-17, 40 S. Ct. 543, 64 L. Ed. 919 (1920) (discussing common law of costs). In other words, "[t]he losing party bears the burden of overcoming the presumption that the prevailing party is entitled to costs[.]" 168th & Dodge, L.P. v. Rave Reviews Cinemas, L.L.C., 501 F.3d 945, 958 (8th Cir. 2007). Despite the presumption, exactly which costs will be awarded is a matter left to the discretion of the district court. Poe v. John Deere Co., 695 F.2d 1103, 1108-09 (8th Cir. 1982). However, "the district court must provide a rationale for denying the prevailing party's claim for costs." Thompson v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 472 F.3d 515, 517 (8th Cir. 2006).

Title 28, United States Code, Section 1920 expressly identifies the expenses a court may tax as costs against a losing party. Crawford Fitting, 482 U.S. at 440. In relevant part, the statute provides:

> A judge . . . of any court of the United States may tax as costs the following:
> (1) Fees of the clerk and marshal;
> (2) Fees for printed or electronically recorded transcripts necessarily obtained for use in the case;
> (3) Fees and disbursements for printing and witnesses;
> (4) Fees for exemplification and the costs of making copies of any materials > where the copies are necessarily obtained for use in the case;

> (5) Docket fees under [§] 1923 of this title;
> (6) Compensation of court appointed experts[.]

28 U.S.C. § 1920. "[T]he Supreme Court has held that 'absent explicit statutory or contractual authorization for the taxation of the expenses of a litigant's witness as costs, federal courts are bound by the limitations set out in 28 U.S.C. § 1821 and § 1920.'" Neosho R-V Sch. Dist. v. Clark, 315 F.3d 1022, 1031 (8th Cir. 2003) (quoting Crawford Fitting, 482 U.S. at 445) (emphasis in Neosho).

B. Analysis

In the Costs Motion, CRST asks the court to review only the Clerk's decision to deny CRST "$ 70,855.52 in costs for videotaped depositions necessarily obtained for use in this litigation."[2] CRST Brief in Support of Costs Motion ("Costs Motion Brief") (docket no. 306-1), at 1. The EEOC resists the Costs Motion in its entirety and asks the court to "affirm the Order of the Clerk of Court." Costs Resistance at 1. All of the depositions taken by CRST in this case were videotaped and stenographically transcribed. The Clerk taxed costs for reporting services

2. As previously noted, CRST seeks the remainder of the unawarded costs as expenses in the Fees Motion.

and transcripts but concluded, in part based on this court's decision in Rakes v. Life Investors Ins. Co. of Am., No. 06-CV-99-LRR, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91231, 2008 WL 4852932 (N.D. Iowa Nov. 7, 2008) (Reade, C.J.) abrogated in part on other grounds by Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 579 F.3d 894 (8th Cir. 2009), that the costs associated with the videotaping of depositions were "not allowed as ordinary expenses." Taxation of Costs at 2.

The EEOC argues that a "prevailing party may claim costs for stenographic deposition transcripts or videotaped depositions, but not both." Costs Resistance at 3. The EEOC also asserts that the videotaped depositions were not "necessary to preserve the testimony of unavailable witnesses or for any reason other than the preference of [CRST's] counsel." Id. at 4. CRST argues that costs for both stenographic transcripts and videotapes of the depositions are recoverable under 28 U.S.C. § 1920. CRST also contends that the videotaped depositions were necessary in this case.

The court shall first consider whether, under the facts of this case, costs are recoverable for both stenographic transcripts and videotaped depositions. Then, the court shall consider whether videotaped depositions were necessarily obtained for use in this case.

1. Stenographic vs. videotaped depositions

In Rakes, this court allowed costs for stenographic deposition transcripts but declined to allow costs for video recording the same depositions. 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91231, 2008 WL 4852932, at *7. In doing so, this court noted that the depositions were taken in "phase I of the discovery process where the issue was class certification and not the merits of the cause of action and thus the court [was] not convinced [the] depositions would have had use at trial." Id. The court concluded that the "video record duplicates the stenographic record and it would not be fair to tax the costs for both, especially because there [was] no showing that any of the witnesses deposed were likely unavailable for hearing/trial or that videotaping the witnesses was the most economical way for the witness to testify." Id.

Subsequent to Rakes, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that "video depositions are included [as taxable costs] under § 1920." Craftsmen Limousine, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 579 F.3d 894, 898 (8th Cir. 2009). In Craftsmen, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals noted that § 1920 did not "specifically authorize video-deposition costs," but reasoned that such costs are taxable because the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "authorize[] video depositions as an alternative to traditional stenographic depositions, which § 1920 does authorize." Id. at 897. However, Craftsmen did not address the issue presented here, that is, whether costs may be taxed for both stenographic and video depositions.

Complicating matters further, Congress amended the language of § 1920(2) in 2008. In both Rakes and Craftsmen, the prior version of the statute was at issue, which provided that the court may tax as costs the "[f]ees of the court reporter for all or any part of the stenographic transcript necessarily obtained for use in the case[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1920(2) (1978). The current version, in contrast, specifically refers to video transcripts and states that the court may tax as costs the "[f]ees for printed or electronically recorded transcripts necessarily obtained for use in the case[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1920(2) (emphasis added).

The EEOC argues that the "plain language" of the amended § 1920(2) provides that CRST cannot recover costs for both video transcripts and stenographic transcripts because the statute describes the recoverable item as "printed or electronically recorded transcripts[.]" Id. In response, CRST relies on Craftsmen for the general proposition that video recording fees are recoverable costs.[3] CRST argues that § 1920, as amended, does not

3. CRST also notes that, in reaching its decision in Craftsmen, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals cited decisions of three Circuit Courts of Appeals that permitted recovery for both stenographic transcripts and video costs. See Little v. Mitsubishi Motors N. Am., Inc., 514 F.3d 699, 701-02 (7th Cir. 2008) (allowing costs for both transcription and videotaping of same depositions); Tilton v. Capital Cities/ABC, Inc., 115 F.3d 1471, 1478 (10th Cir. 1997) (holding that district court did not abuse its discretion in taxing costs of both transcription and videotaping of seven depositions); see also Morrison v. Reichhold Chems., 97 F.3d 460, 464-65 (11th Cir. 1996) (holding that "when a party notices a deposition to be recorded by nonstenographic means, or by both stenographic and nonstenographic means, and no objection is raised at that time by the other party . . . it is appropriate under § 1920 to award the cost of conducting the deposition in the manner noticed"). The current version of § 1920 was not before the Courts of Appeals in these decisions and the issue presented here was not before the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in Craftsmen.

preclude recovery for both costs, and asserts that the following district court decisions support an award of both costs: Avante Int'l Tech. Corp. v. Premier Election Solutions, Inc., No. 4:06cv0978 TCM, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93522, 2009 WL 3259613, at *3 (E.D. Mo. Oct. 7, 2009) (allowing costs for both transcripts and video depositions); Advanced Software Design Corp. v. Fiserv, Inc., No. 4:07CV185 CDP, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99216, 2009 WL 3429584, at *1 (E.D. Mo. Oct. 23, 2009) (same). The court disagrees. In both Avante and Advanced Software, the district court applied the prior version of § 1920(2). Avante, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93522, 2009 WL 3259613, at *3; Advanced Software, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99216, 2009 WL 3429584, at *1. Neither case mentions or discusses the 2008 amendment to the statute.

The court declines to award CRST the costs for videotaped depositions in addition to the costs for stenographic transcripts. The amended version of § 1920(2) permits costs for "[f]ees for printed or electronically recorded transcripts necessarily obtained for use in the case[.]" 28 U.S.C. § 1920(2) (emphasis added). In light of the use of the disjunctive in the amended language, the court determines that costs are taxable for either stenographic transcription or videotaped depositions--not both. See United States v. Smith, 35 F.3d 344, 346 (8th Cir. 1994) ("The ordinary usage of the word 'or' is disjunctive, indicating an alternative. Construing the word 'or' to mean 'and' is conjunctive, and is clearly in contravention of its ordinary usage."); see also Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339, 99 S. Ct. 2326, 60 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1979) (stating that, in construing a statute, courts are obliged to give effect, if possible, to every word Congress used, including "or"). It would be contrary to the plain language of § 1920 to allow CRST to recover costs for both stenographic transcripts and video costs for the same depositions. Accordingly, the court shall deny the Costs Motion.

2. Necessity of the videotaped depositions

Even if the court found that costs were taxable for both stenographic transcripts and video recordings, the court would not allow costs for video depositions because they were not "necessarily obtained for use in this case." 28 U.S.C. § 1920(2). CRST argues that the video depositions were "necessarily obtained for use at trial due to the large number of allegedly aggrieved individuals, whom CRST might have called adversely by presenting their videotaped testimony or impeached at trial with their videotapes." Bill of Costs Reply at 6. However, as the EEOC observes, "CRST has not identified a single EEOC class member who indicated that she would be unable to travel to, or testify at the scheduled trial in Cedar Rapids, Iowa." Costs Resistance at 4. CRST fails to rebut this claim. CRST argues that the video recordings would be more convenient and better show the deponent's credibility and demeanor. On these facts, the court concludes that the video recordings of the depositions were not necessary in this case. CRST has not offered any persuasive explanation as to why the stenographic transcripts would be insufficient for the purposes it identifies, much less why both stenographic transcripts and video recordings of the depositions might be needed. Accordingly, the court shall deny the Costs Motion.

Appendix E

V. ATTORNEYS' FEES & EXPENSES

A. Attorneys' Fees

CRST seeks $ 7,624,546.47 in attorneys' fees. The court first considers whether an award of attorneys' fees is warranted. Then, the court shall consider the amount of any award.

1. Legal background: fees in Title VII cases

Title VII provides that:

> In any action or proceeding under this subchapter the court, in its discretion, may allow the prevailing party, other than the Commission or the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee (including expert fees) as part of the costs, and the Commission and the United States shall be liable for costs the same as a private person.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k). The court previously found that CRST is a "prevailing party" as to the EEOC. Order on Motion to Show Cause at 40. Accordingly, Title VII provides that the court may award CRST a "reasonable attorney's fee." Id.

In interpreting this provision, "the Supreme Court has distinguished between prevailing Title VII plaintiffs and prevailing Title VII defendants." Marquart v. Lodge 837, Int'l Ass'n of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, 26 F.3d 842, 848 (8th Cir. 1994). A district court may award attorneys' fees to a prevailing plaintiff "'in all but very unusual circumstances[.]'" Id. (quoting Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405, 415, 95 S. Ct. 2362, 45 L. Ed. 2d 280 (1975)). However, an award of attorneys' fees to a prevailing defendant is appropriate in much more limited circumstances.

In Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412, 98 S. Ct. 694, 54 L. Ed. 2d 648 (1978), the Supreme Court outlined the principles that guide a district court's discretion when it decides whether to grant attorneys' fees to a prevailing defendant in a Title VII case. The Court explained:

> [A] district court may in its discretion award attorney's fees to a prevailing defendant in a Title VII case upon a finding that the plaintiff's action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation, even though not brought in subjective bad faith.
> In applying these criteria, it is important that a district court resist the understandable temptation to engage in post hoc reasoning by concluding that, because a plaintiff did not ultimately prevail, his [or her] action must have been unreasonable or without foundation. This kind of hindsight logic could discourage all but the most airtight claims, for seldom can a prospective plaintiff be sure of ultimate success.

Id. at 421-22. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has explained that this standard is designed "[t]o discourage the litigation of frivolous, unreasonable, groundless, or vexatious claims, but without discouraging the rigorous enforcement of federal rights under Title VII." Marquart, 26 F.3d at 849.

2. Attorneys' fees are warranted

CRST contends that it is entitled to an award of attorneys' fees because the EEOC "engaged in an unreasonable and vexatious course of proceeding, heedless of the fundamental principles of Title VII." CRST's Petition in Support of the Motion ("CRST Fees Brief") (docket no. 282-22), at 5. Specifically, CRST argues that the EEOC's failure to investigate, make a reasonable cause determination and attempt to conciliate the specific allegations of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons prior to filing the Complaint was unreasonable and vexatious.

The EEOC first argues that it "had a strong basis for alleging class-wide sex harassment was occurring at CRST." Fees Resistance at 3. The EEOC points out that several claims survived motions for summary judgment and that the court acknowledged in its Order that "dozens of potentially meritorious sexual harassment claims may now never see the inside of a courtroom" due to the EEOC's failure to investigate and conciliate those claims. Id. at 4-5 (citing Order at 38). The EEOC also asserts that "[t]he theory upon which the [c]ourt dismissed [the] EEOC's [C]omplaint is one that had never been used by any court contemplating an EEOC sex harassment case brought on behalf of a group of women." Id. at 5. Thus, the EEOC contends that it had "no reason to anticipate dismissal on the basis of a flawed conciliation." Id.

The court finds that an award of fees is warranted in this case under the Christiansburg standard. The EEOC's failure to investigate and attempt to conciliate the individual claims constituted an unreasonable failure to satisfy Title VII's prerequisites to suit. As the court observed in its Order on Motion to Show Cause:

> . The EEOC did not investigate the specific allegations of any of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons until after the Complaint was filed. For example, the EEOC did not interview any witnesses or subpoena any documents to determine whether any of their allegations were true.
> . The EEOC did not identify any of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons as members of the Letter of Determination's "class" until after it filed the Complaint. Indeed, prior to filing the Complaint, CRST enquired as to the size of the "class" and the EEOC responded that it did not know.
> . The EEOC did not make a reasonable cause determination as to the specific allegations of any of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons prior to filing the Complaint. Indeed, at the time the EEOC issued the Letter of Determination on > July 12, 2007, 27 of the remaining 67 allegedly aggrieved persons had not yet been sexually harassed. Indeed, most of these 27 women alleged they were sexually harassed after the instant lawsuit was filed. Although 38 of the remaining 40 allegedly aggrieved persons allege they were sexually harassed before the EEOC issued the Letter of Determination on July 12, 2007, the EEOC admits that it was not even aware of their allegations until after the filing of the Complaint. The EEOC used discovery in the instant lawsuit to find them.

> . The EEOC did not attempt to conciliate the specific allegations of the allegedly aggrieved persons prior to filing the Complaint.

Order on Motion to Show Cause at 31-32. The court relies on these findings to conclude that the EEOC's failure to comply with Title VII's jurisdictional conditions precedent--investigation, reasonable cause determination and conciliation--made this lawsuit unreasonable.

The EEOC contends that this action was not unreasonable because the court's dismissal on such grounds was unexpected. This argument is faulty for at least two reasons. First, as outlined in the court's Order on Motion to Show Cause, the EEOC's duties prior to seeking relief on behalf of allegedly aggrieved persons in a § 706 lawsuit are well-established. See Id. at 25-26 (discussing procedure of § 706 lawsuits as outlined in Occidental Life Ins. Co. of Cal. v. EEOC, 432 U.S. 355, 359-360, 97 S. Ct.

2447, 53 L. Ed. 2d 402 (1977)). Several courts, when faced with analogous facts, have "resisted the EEOC's attempts to perfect an end-run around Title VII's statutory prerequisites to suit." Id. at 32 (citing EEOC v. Target Corp., No. 02-C-146, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35762, 2007 WL 1461298 (E.D. Wis. May 16, 2007); EEOC v. Outback Steakhouse of Fla., Inc., 520 F. Supp. 2d 1250, 1263-68 (D. Colo. 2007); EEOC v. Jillian's of Indianapolis, IN, Inc., 279 F. Supp. 2d 974, 982-83 (S.D. Ind. 2003); EEOC v. E. Hills Ford Sales, Inc., 445 F. Supp. 985, 987-89 (W.D. Pa. 1978)). Second, the fact that relatively few courts have relied on such grounds to dismiss suits brought by the EEOC does not excuse the EEOC's tactics in the instant action or somehow make its lawsuit reasonable.

The EEOC's focus on the potential merit of the claims of several allegedly aggrieved women is a red herring. The court did not dismiss the Complaint because the remaining 67 allegedly aggrieved persons' claims were without foundation. Rather, the court did so "[b]ecause the EEOC did not investigate, issue a reasonable cause determination or conciliate the claims of the 67 allegedly aggrieved persons[.]" Order on Motion to Show Cause at 37 (citing EEOC v. Pierce Packing Co., 669 F.2d 605, 608 (9th Cir. 1982) ("Genuine investigation, reasonable cause determination and conciliation are jurisdictional conditions precedent to suit by the EEOC[.]")). The court noted that dismissal was a "severe but appropriate remedy" because to rule otherwise "would ratify a 'sue first, ask questions later' litigation strategy on the part of the EEOC, which would be anathema to Congressional intent." Order on Motion to Show Cause at 38.

The court finds that an award of attorneys' fees is appropriate because the EEOC's actions in pursuing this lawsuit were unreasonable, contrary to the procedure outlined by Title VII and imposed an unnecessary burden upon CRST and the court. An award of fees is necessary to guarantee that Title VII's procedures are observed in a manner that maximizes the potential for ending discriminatory practices without litigation in federal court.[4]

3. Legal background: amount of attorneys' fees award

"'The starting point in determining [reasonable attorneys' fees] is the lodestar, which is calculated by multiplying the number of hours reasonably expended by the reasonable hourly rates.'" Hanig v. Lee, 415 F.3d 822, 825 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Fish v. St. Cloud State Univ., 295 F.3d 849, 851 (8th Cir. 2002)). The lodestar figure is presumed to be the reasonable fee to which counsel is entitled. City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 U.S. 557, 562, 112 S. Ct. 2638, 120 L. Ed. 2d 449 (1992); Casey v. City of Cabool, Mo., 12 F.3d 799, 805 (8th Cir. 1993). "If the prevailing party did not achieve success on all claims,

4. The court again makes no finding as to whether the trial attorneys for the EEOC acted in bad faith. But see Order on Motion to Show Cause at 38 n. 25 (discussing press release and statements regarding this lawsuit made by one of the EEOC's "higher-level attorneys") (citing EEOC v. Asplundh Tree Expert Co., 340 F.3d 1256, 1261 (11th Cir. 2003) (opining that the EEOC may have avoided conciliation to make headlines and press its case against the employer in the media)).

[the lodestar] may be reduced, taking into account the most critical factor, 'the degree of success obtained,' with discretion residing in the district court." Simpson v. Merchants & Planters Bank, 441 F.3d 572, 580 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 436-37, 103 S. Ct. 1933, 76 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1983)).

The district court retains wide discretion in making a fee award. See Hensley, 461 U.S. at 437 ("We reemphasize that the district court has discretion in determining the amount of a fee award."). "This is appropriate in view of the district court's superior understanding of the litigation and the desirability of avoiding frequent appellate review of what essentially are factual matters." Id. The district court must, however, "provide a concise but clear explanation of its reasons for the fee award." Id. "When an adjustment is requested on the basis of . . . [the] limited nature of the relief obtained by the plaintiff, the district court should make clear that it has considered the relationship between the amount of the fee awarded and the results obtained." Id.

A reasonable hourly rate is generally the prevailing market rate in the locale, that is, the "ordinary rate for similar work in the community where the case has been litigated." Moysis v. DTG Datanet, 278 F.3d 819, 828-29 (8th Cir. 2002) (quoting Emery v. Hunt, 272 F.3d 1042, 1047 (8th Cir. 2001)).

> To inform and assist the court in the exercise of its discretion, the burden is on the fee applicant to produce satisfactory evidence--in > addition to the attorney's own affidavits--that the requested rates are in line with those prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience and reputation.

Blum v. Stenson, 465 U.S. 886, 895 n.11, 104 S. Ct. 1541, 79 L. Ed. 2d 891 (1984). "A rate determined in this way is normally deemed to be reasonable, and is referred to--for convenience--as the prevailing market rate." Id.

The prevailing party must also proffer evidence of the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation. Hensley, 461 U.S. at 433.

> Inadequate documentation may warrant a reduced fee . . . . Incomplete or imprecise billing records preclude any meaningful review by the district court of the fee application for "excessive, redundant, or otherwise unnecessary" hours and may make it impossible to attribute a particular attorney's specific time to a distinct issue or claim.

H.J. Inc. v. Flygt Corp., 925 F.2d 257, 260 (quoting Hensley, 461 U.S. at 437).

"'[M]ost factors relevant to determining the amount of a fee are subsumed within the lodestar.'" Casey, 12 F.3d at 805 (quoting Hendrickson v. Branstad, 934 F.2d 158, 162 (8th Cir. 1991)); see Hensley, 461 U.S. at 434 n.9 (citing Copeland v. Marshall, 641 F.2d 880, 890, 205 U.S.

App. D.C. 390 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (en banc) ("[I]t should be noted that many of these factors usually are subsumed within the initial calculation of hours reasonably expended at a reasonable hourly rate.")). However, the court should consider the factors set forth in Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 488 F.2d 714, 717-19 (5th Cir. 1974). McDonald v. Armontrout, 860 F.2d 1456, 1459 (8th Cir. 1988).

> Johnson called for consideration of twelve factors: (1) the time and labor required; (2) the novelty and difficulty of the question; (3) the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly; (4) the preclusion of other employment by the attorney due to acceptance of the case; (5) the customary fee; (6) whether the fee is fixed or contingent; (7) time limitations imposed by the client or the circumstances; (8) the amount involved and the results obtained; (9) the experience, reputation, and ability of the attorney; (10) the "undesirability" of the case; (11) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client; and (12) awards in similar cases.

McDonald, 860 F.2d at 1459 n.4. "[T]he most critical factor" in determining the reasonableness of an attorneys' fee award in civil rights litigation is "the degree of success obtained." Hensley, 461 U.S. at 436.

When making the determination of a reasonable fee, a court should consider the "plaintiff's overall success; the necessity and usefulness of plaintiff's activity in the particular matter for which fees are requested; and the efficiency with which plaintiff's attorneys conducted that activity." Jenkins v. Missouri, 127 F.3d 709, 718 (8th Cir. 1997) (en banc). A district court need not address exhaustively every Johnson factor. Emery, 272 F.3d at 1048. The court should consider what factors, "in the context of the present case, deserve explicit consideration." Griffin v. Jim Jamison, Inc., 188 F.3d 996, 997-98 (8th Cir. 1999). The district court should use its own knowledge, experience and expertise in determining the amount of the fee to be awarded. Gilbert v. City of Little Rock, 867 F.2d 1063, 1066-67 (8th Cir. 1989).

4. Lodestar

a. Reasonable hourly rate

CRST requests the following hourly rates for the services of the attorneys of its lead counsel, Jenner & Block ("Jenner"):

Attorney	Hourly Rate
John H. Mathias	$ 825
Robert T. Markowski	$ 666.67
Terri L. Mascherin	$ 675
Barry Levenstam	$ 650
James T. Malysiak	$ 600

CRST requests the following hourly rates for the services of the attorneys and support staff of its local counsel, Simmons Perrine Moyer & Bergman ("Simmons"):

Attorney	Hourly Rate
Kevin Visser	$ 295
Thomas Wolle	$ 200
Allison Heffern	$ 200
Iris Muchmore	$ 240
Dawn Gibson	$ 175
Kelly Geerlings (legal assistant)	$ 110
Marcia Harris	$ 165
Brian Fagan	$ 185
Deb Foege (legal assistant)	$ 95
Robert Hatala	$ 200
Webb Wassmer	$ 200
Eric Lam	$ 200

The reasonable hourly rate is generally the "ordinary rate for similar work in the community where the case has been litigated." Moysis, 278 F.3d at 828-29 (quoting Emery, 272 F.3d at 1047). In some circumstances, however, the relevant market for determining a reasonable hourly rate may "extend beyond the local geographic community." Casey, 12 F.3d at 805. For example, in specialized areas of the law, the national market may provide a reasonable hourly rate. Id. Similarly, if a party is unable to retain local counsel, hourly rates may not be limited to the prevailing local rate. See Avalon Cinema Corp. v. Thompson, 689 F.2d 137, 140-41 (8th Cir. 1982) (explaining that counsel may not be limited to lower local rates if the movant shows that it was unable to retain local counsel despite a diligent, good faith effort).

CRST asks the court to apply a "national rate" to assess the reasonableness of Jenner's hourly rates. The EEOC argues that a national rate is inappropriate and asks the court to "reduce the hourly rates of Jenner's lawyers to the hourly rates sought by lawyers [at Simmons] with comparable experience." Fees Resistance at 13. CRST does not argue that it was impossible to retain competent local counsel to handle this case. Rather, CRST contends that a "national rate" is appropriate in this case because Jenner is "nationally recognized for its accomplishments in major complex litigation." Fees Brief at 12.

Jenner's hourly rates are much higher than those charged by attorneys in this community. For example, Cheryl Kras, a Jenner paralegal, billed at a higher rate than all but one of the Simmons partners involved with this case. The lowest rate charged by Jenner associates, $325, was higher than any Simmons partner. John Mathias, the lead Jenner partner in this case, billed at an average of $825 per hour--approximately four times that charged by some Simmons partners involved with this case. In short, it is clear to the court that Jenner's hourly rates are not the "ordinary rate for similar work in the community where the case has been litigated." Moysis, 278 F.3d at 828-29. Having found that Jenner's hourly rates are unreasonable when judged against rates charged for similar work in the community, the court turns to consider whether a different standard should be applied.

The court finds that this case did not involve a specialized area of the law that prevented CRST from retaining local counsel. Thus, the court declines to apply a national rate on this basis. CRST offers only general information regarding Jenner's reputation in "major commercial litigation," the type of clients it typically represents or the backgrounds of its lawyers involved in this case. Fees Brief at 12. While the Jenner attorneys involved in this case, and the firm as a whole, certainly have extensive experience in "major commercial litigation," the court finds that such experience does not rise to the level of a "specialized" area of the law. Cf. Planned Parenthood, Sioux Falls Clinic v. Miller, 70 F.3d 517 (8th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (applying Chicago market rate because attorneys "[did] this kind of work routinely" and were "leaders in the field of reproductive-rights law").

In its Reply, CRST argues that a national rate is appropriate because several of the Jenner attorneys involved in this case are "affiliated" with the firm's "Labor & Employment" practice. Fees Reply at 7. The court finds that the participation of these attorneys does not warrant the application of a national hourly rate. Of the thirteen Jenner partners that billed in this case, only two, Carla Rozycki and Richard Campbell, are affiliated with the "Labor & Employment" practice. The hours billed by Rozycki and Campbell constitute approximately 12% of the total hours billed by Jenner partners in this case. The court notes that several Jenner associates affiliated with the "Labor & Employment" practice also worked extensively on this case. However, as CRST its notes, the Jenner attorneys affiliated with that practice worked only "25% of the total time that [Jenner] spent defending CRST." Id. at 8. The court also notes that several Simmons attorneys involved in this case, including partners Kevin Visser and Thomas Wolle, have significant experience in employment litigation, as do many other lawyers in this community. CRST has not shown that, despite a good faith effort to secure adequate local counsel, it was unable to do so. Accordingly, the court declines the apply a national rate based on the unavailability of competent local counsel.

The court notes that several factors in this case warrant a large fee award. Specifically, CRST's counsel successfully obtained a dismissal of the entire case. The case involved hundreds of allegedly aggrieved individuals and potentially massive liability to CRST. Jenner's attorneys have significant experience and outstanding reputations in large, high-stakes litigation. However, the court finds that Jenner's hourly rates are unreasonable in light of the prevailing rates for similar work in the community. CRST has failed to satisfy its burden to show that "the requested rates are in line with those prevailing in the community for similar services by lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience and reputation." Blum, 465 U.S. at 895 n. 11. The court also concludes that the circumstances do not warrant a departure from the general practice of computing a reasonable hourly rate based on the local community. As the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has explained:

> We do not . . . compute fees mechanically and without question on the basis of the hourly fee that a lawyer regularly charges in fact. It remains our duty to fix a fee that is reasonable and, as part of that process, to determine a reasonable hourly rate. Automatic acceptance of a lawyer's customary charge would be an abdication of our duty to supervise the conduct of the bar and do justice to the losing as well as to the winning side. This court does not accept the attorneys' usual billing rate as definitively fixing their billing rates for this litigation.

Avalon Cinema Corp., 689 F.2d at 140 (citations and quotation marks omitted).

The court finds it is appropriate to reduce the rates charged by Jenner's attorneys and Jenner's personnel to levels comparable to that of the Simmons attorneys. Accordingly, the court shall reduce the hourly rates of Jenner partners to $ 295 and the hourly rates of Jenner associates to $ 175. The hourly rates of Jenner paralegals, legal assistants and other support staff are reduced to $ 110. These hourly rates shall be used to calculate the lodestar.

b. Reasonable hours spent

The EEOC argues that "CRST is not entitled to most of the fees it incurred because they could have been avoided." Fees Resistance at 8. Specifically, the EEOC contends that the theory on which CRST ultimately obtained dismissal of this suit--the EEOC's failure to investigate, make reasonable cause determinations and conduct conciliation efforts of specific allegations--could have been raised earlier. The EEOC argues that CRST could have avoided costly discovery and motion practice had this issue been raised earlier.

The court finds that this argument is without merit. CRST first raised these issues on November 6, 2008, when it filed its first "Motion Under Rule 16(f) for an Order to Show Cause Concerning the EEOC's Identification of Class Members" ("Motion to Show Cause") (docket no. 56). Specifically, CRST argued that "[t]he EEOC has effectively abdicated its responsibility to investigate potential claims before pursuing them and instead imposed a large, unfair burden to both CRST and the [c]ourt to sort things out." Brief in Support of Motion to Show Cause (docket no. 56-1), at 9. The court declined to strike any of the allegedly aggrieved persons identified by the EEOC at that time because the EEOC represented that "it had a good faith belief that each and every one of the approximately 270 [allegedly aggrieved persons] ha[d] an actionable claim for sex discrimination." Order on Motion to Show Cause (docket no. 66), at 8. On April 30, 2009, the court dismissed the EEOC's pattern or practice claim. On May 8, 2009, CRST filed a "Motion for Leave to File Motion for Order to Show Cause Why [the EEOC's] Section 706 Claims on Behalf of Allegedly Aggrieved Persons Should Not Be Dismissed" (docket no. 217). CRST argued that, in light of the dismissal of the EEOC's pattern or practice claim, the "EEOC cannot show that it has satisfied Title VII's preconditions for filing suit on behalf of any individuals other than plaintiffs/interveners Starke and Peeples." Id. at 1. The EEOC's argument that CRST should have raised this issue earlier to avoid fees overlooks that fact that CRST raised it as early as November, 6, 2008, and again raised it shortly after the court dismissed the EEOC's pattern or practice claim, which the EEOC had relied upon to bring the claims of many of the allegedly aggrieved persons.

The EEOC does not otherwise object to the amount of hours spent on this case by CRST's counsel. CRST provided detailed documentation in support of these totals. After reviewing this documentation, the court finds that the hours expended by CRST's counsel on this case were largely reasonable. This case was exceptionally large and complex. It required significant discovery--nearly 200 depositions--and dozens of motions. The records also reveal that CRST's counsel efficiently utilized a range of attorneys, paralegals and legal assistants to perform work appropriate for their experience and expertise.

However, for the reasons set forth in Section V.B.5., infra, the court finds that the time expended by CRST's counsel to prepare for and participate in a mock jury exercise was unreasonable. The court has reviewed Jenner's billing statements and has identified the time entries related to the mock jury exercise. The billing records reveal that Jenner attorneys billed $ 62,823.75 for work exclusively related to the mock jury exercise. This amount must be adjusted based on the reasonable hourly rates determined by the court in Section V.A.4.a.i., supra. After adjustment, the fees charged by Jenner for work exclusively related to the mock jury exercise total $ 25,687.50. The court shall exclude this amount from the award of attorneys' fees.

The billing records also reveal $ 171,553.75 of time entries that include, among other tasks, work related to preparation for the mock jury exercise. After adjusting this amount based on the previously determined hourly rates, this amount totals $ 74,048.75. However, because these entries also include one or more unrelated tasks, such as legal research and writing, it is impossible for the court to discern how much of this time was billed for work related to the mock jury exercise and how much was devoted to the other activities. Based on a review of these entries, the court concludes that it is appropriate to reduce this amount by half, or $ 37,024.38, to account for the time billed for work related to the mock jury exercise. In sum, the court declines to award $ 62,711.88 in attorneys' fees related to the mock jury exercise.

c. Lodestar amounts

Jenner attorneys and support staff billed a total of 18,005.75 hours on this case. CRST seeks a total of $ 7,121,569.25 for this work. As previously discussed, the court reduces the hourly rates of Jenner attorneys to the rates of Simmons attorneys and staff. The converted rates are set forth below.

Attorney	Hours	Reasonable Rate	Reductions[5]	Award
John H. Mathias (partner)	625.25	$ 295	$ 17,817.75	$ 166,631.00
Robert T. Markowski (partner)	1,591.00	$ 295	$ 58,613.50	$ 410,731.50
Terri L. Mascherin (partner)	39.00	$ 295	$ 3,044.25	$ 8,460.75

James T. Malysiak (partner)	1,185.25	$ 295	$ 60,049.50	$ 289,599.25
Carla J. Rozycki (partner)	181.50	$ 295	$ 13,335.00	$ 40,207.50

5. The "Reductions" column reflects fees that Jenner billed to CRST, but, for various reasons, does not seek to recover in the Fees Motion. The court re-calculated the "Reductions" by determining the recoverable percentage of a timekeeper's rate and reducing the Reduction to keep it consistent with the timekeeper's reduced rate. For example, the court determined Mr. Mathias's "Reduction" as follows: (1) the court determined that the reasonable hourly rate of $ 295 was 36% of Mr. Mathias's claimed hourly rate of $ 825; (2) the court re-calculated the "Reduction" by multiplying the original "Reduction" of $ 49,493.75 by 36%, which equals $ 17,817.75.

Totals	18,005.75			$ 3,564,106.51

The above hours, multiplied by the reasonable hourly rates, total $ 3,564,106.51 in attorneys' fees. The court deducts $ 62,711.88 from this amount for fees billed by Jenner attorneys related to the mock jury exercise. This yields a lodestar amount of $ 3,501,394.63 in attorneys' fees for the services of Jenner.

Simmons attorneys and support staff billed a total of 2,507.66 hours working on this case at rates ranging from $ 95 to $ 295. CRST seeks a total of $ 502,977.02 for this work. The EEOC does not object to the hourly rates charged by the Simmons attorneys or staff. The court finds that the hourly rates and hours billed by Simmons are reasonable and consistent with the prevailing market rate for similar work in the community. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 502,977.02 in attorneys' fees billed by Simmons.

5. Summary

The court has calculated a lodestar amount of $ 3,501,394.63 for Jenner's services and a lodestar amount of $ 502,977.02 for Simmons' services. This yields a total of $ 4,004,371.65 in attorneys' fees.

B. Reasonable out-of-pocket expenses

CRST asks the court to award it $ 816,864.95 for out-of-pocket expenses incurred by its attorneys. These expenses are comprised of the following: long distance telephone expenses, messenger and overnight express, fees for investigators, expert witness fees, mock jury fees, computer legal research, postage, travel and related expenses, demonstrative aids for trial, fees incurred in preparation of the Fees Motion, costs for videotaped depositions,[6] costs to convert depositions to DVD and costs for "exemplification and copies of papers[.]"[7] Fees Supplement at 4. "[R]easonable out-of pocket expenses of the kind normally charged to clients by attorneys," but not recoverable as costs under 28 U.S.C. § 1920, may be "included as part of the reasonable attorney's fees awarded." Pinkham v. Camex, Inc., 84 F.3d 292, 294-95 (8th Cir. 1996); see also Goss Int'l Corp. v. Tokyo Kikai Seisakusho, Ltd., No. C00-35-LRR, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10164, 2004 WL 1234130, at *6 (N.D. Iowa June 2, 2004) (Reade, C.J.) ("Reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred by an attorney which normally would be charged to a fee-paying client ordinarily are includable in a statutory award of fees."). The EEOC argues that certain expenses should be disallowed in their entirety while others should be disallowed due to documentation problems. The court shall address each of these expenses, in turn.

6. This amount includes $ 70,855.52 for expenses incurred to videotape depositions. As discussed in Section IV.B, supra, CRST also seeks this amount as costs under 28 U.S.C. § 1920. In light of the court's conclusion that this expense is not recoverable under § 1920, CRST asks that this expense "be considered as attorneys' fees in the event the Court does not award them pursuant to § 1920." Fees Supplement at 2.

7. In the Fees Motion, CRST seeks $ 569,564.64 for expenses. In the Fees Supplement, CRST asks the court to award an additional $ 247,300.31, because the Clerk declined to award these expenses as costs pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1920.

Appendix E

1. Long distance telephone expenses

CRST seeks $ 176.17 in long distance telephone expenses. The EEOC does not specifically object to this expense. The court finds that these charges are adequately documented and reasonable. Therefore, the court shall award CRST $ 176.17 for long distance telephone expenses as part of the attorneys' fee award.

2. Messenger and overnight express

CRST seeks $ 5,127.86 in messenger and overnight delivery expenses. The EEOC does not specifically object to this expense. The court finds that these charges are adequately documented and reasonable. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 5,127.86 for messenger and overnight expenses as part of the attorneys' fee award.

3. Investigator fees

CRST also seeks to recover fees it spent to employ investigators. CRST argues that investigators were "necessary to the litigation in order to locate and interview witnesses." Fees Brief at 21. CRST has been billed $ 103,523.07 for private investigation work. Apparently, CRST is "disputing that amount, and believes that it should have been invoiced for no more than $ 62,183.67." Id. at 22. Accordingly, CRST asks the court to award it $ 62,183.67 for its private investigator fees.

The EEOC argues that the investigators were unnecessary. Specifically, the EEOC contends that much of the investigative work took place after the close of discovery and involved "newly identified witnesses" that the EEOC argues could not have been used at trial. Fees Resistance at 15. Alternatively, the EEOC argues that the investigator fees should be "substantially reduced" because the investigators billed excessive hours and charged "exorbitant" hourly rates. Id. at 15-16.

Investigator fees are recoverable as out-of-pocket expenses that would ordinarily be passed onto the client. See, e.g., Knutson v. Ag Processing, Inc., 273 F. Supp. 2d 961, 1021-22 (N.D. Iowa 2003) (awarding as reasonable out-of-pocket expenses fees to retain a "legal investigator" who interviewed witnesses, performed witness preparation and prepared documents) rev'd on other grounds, 394 F.3d 1047 (8th Cir. 2005). CRST contends it used the investigators to locate the individuals accused of sexual harassment, as well as "other individuals who may have had knowledge of certain claims[.]" Fees Reply at 9. CRST claims that locating and interviewing these people was difficult because: (1) many of the allegedly aggrieved persons identified "new and additional harassers" during discovery; (2) many of the accused individuals no longer worked for CRST; (3) the witnesses were "dispersed across the country"; and (4) CRST had "a tight time frame" in which to conduct its investigation. Id.

The court finds that CRST's use of investigators was warranted and reasonable in this case. Due to the large number of allegedly aggrieved persons and alleged harassers, the geographic disparity of these individuals and the fact that more than one hundred of the alleged harassers no longer worked at CRST, the use of private investigators was appropriate.

The court also rejects the EEOC's argument that the investigator fees should be "substantially reduced" either because the number of hours billed by the investigators was excessive or because their hourly rates were "exorbitant." Fees Resistance at 15-16. Specifically, the EEOC argues that, "[g]iven the excessive time spent supervising rather than actually investigating, the number of investigator hours should be reduced by 50%." Id. at 16. The court disagrees that investigator fees associated with monitoring and assigning investigative work should be excluded or reduced. The employment of numerous investigators in various parts of the country undoubtedly required supervision and coordination. In fact, the supervision likely improved the efficiency of the investigators' work by preventing duplicative or needless effort. Finally, the court finds that the hourly rates paid to the investigators were reasonable. The hourly rates ranged from $ 105 to $ 300. These rates are reasonable for the tasks performed, which included locating and interviewing witnesses and drafting memoranda to summarize the investigation. Further, CRST has elected to not seek more than $ 40,000 in investigative fees because it found certain hourly rates objectionable. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 62,183.67 in out-of-pocket expenses for investigator fees as part of its attorneys' fees award.

4. Expert witness fees

CRST seeks $242,212.22 in expert witness fees for the work of two expert witnesses CRST. This amount consists of $ 104,866.66 billed by Dr. Jone McFadden Papinchock, an expert in "Industrial and Organizational Psychology." Fees Brief at 22. Dr. Papinchock's work included research and analysis of CRST's sexual harassment policies and practices, consultation with CRST's counsel, preparation of an expert report and deposition testimony. The remaining $ 137,345.56 in expert fees are sought for the work of Dr. Mary Dunn Baker. Dr. Baker has a Ph.D. in Economics. Dr. Baker prepared an expert report and conducted statistical analyses of the gender composition of CRST's workforce and the frequency of sexual harassment at CRST. CRST submitted documentation of these expenses, including invoices and detailed billing reports.

The EEOC objects to the expert witness fees to the extent that they could have been avoided if CRST had moved for and obtained dismissal of this case at an earlier stage. For the reasons stated in Section V.A.4.b., supra, the court rejects this argument. The court has reviewed the documentation of these expenses and finds that the fees are reasonable. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $242,212.22 as an out-of-pocket expense for expert witness fees.

5. Mock jury fees

CRST seeks an award of $74,640.23 for fees expended on a mock jury exercise. CRST contends that the mock jury exercise was "reasonably necessary to address the complex and complicated issues, significant strategic decisions, novel issues, and sheer volume of claims involved in this case, including the potential for a jury to hear arguments regarding claims of over 156 women, testimony of up to 405 witnesses, and presentation of up to 3,043 exhibits." Id. at 24. CRST states that it held the exercise before the court ruled on its dispositive motions and that, although this case did not ultimately go to trial, the exercise "provided significant value to CRST's litigation strategy, including its drafting of the Pretrial Order, witness and exhibit lists, and motions in limine." Id. CRST submitted documentation of this expense. The EEOC does not object to the propriety of an award for the mock jury exercise or to the specific amount sought.

Several courts have awarded expenses for the costs of a "mock jury" or similar exercise. See Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians of Or. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., No. CV 00-1693-A, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25830, 2003 WL 23715982, at *8 (D. Or. Oct. 27, 2003) (collecting cases) vacated on other grounds, Weyerhaeuser Co. v. Ross-Simmons Hardwood Lumber Co., Inc., 549 U.S. 312, 127 S. Ct. 1069, 166 L. Ed. 2d 911 (2007). However, the court finds that CRST's decision to conduct a mock jury was not reasonably necessary to further the litigation in this case. See Goss, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10164, 2004 WL 1234130, at *7 (denying reimbursement for attorneys' fees or expenses incurred in connection with a mock jury exercise). Accordingly, the court denies CRST's request for $ 74,640.23 in expenses for the mock jury exercise.

6. Computer legal research

CRST seeks an award of $ 70,780.61 in computerized legal research expenses. However, it is well-settled in the Eighth Circuit that "computer-aided research, like any other form of legal research, is a component of attorneys' fees and cannot be independently taxed as an item of cost in addition to the attorneys' fee award." Standley v. Chilhowee R-IV Sch. Dist., 5 F.3d 319, 325 (8th Cir. 1993) (quoting Leftwich v. Harris-Stowe State College, 702 F.2d 686, 695 (8th Cir. 1983). "[C]omputer-based legal research must be factored into the attorneys' hourly rate, hence the cost of the computer time may not be added to the fee award." Id. Accordingly, CRST is not entitled to any award for computer-based legal research.

7. Postage

CRST seeks $ 49.84 for postage expenses incurred by Jenner and billed to CRST. The EEOC does not object to this expense or the amount CRST requests. The court finds that this expense is reasonable. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 49.84 in postage expenses as part of the attorneys' fee award.

8. Travel and related expenses

CRST seeks $ 34,914.06 in compensation for travel expenses. This amount includes costs incurred to attend hearings, depositions and to review documents, as well as "meals while out of the office." Fees Brief at 25. The EEOC objects to $ 3,375.89 of this amount on the grounds that CRST did not provide supporting documentation for certain expenses. In reply, CRST offered additional documentation to support some the travel expenses to which the EEOC objects. See Fees Reply Ex. B-D (docket no. 300-2 through 300-4). However, CRST fails to provide the underlying invoices or copies of receipts for several claimed travel expenses totaling $ 778.12. As a result, the court is unable to assess the reasonableness of these expenses. The remaining amounts are supported by adequate documentation and are reasonable. CRST has reduced its request for travel expenses by excluding items the court would consider discretionary expenditures. Further, the court finds that such expenses are of the type normally passed on to a fee-paying client. Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 34,135.94 for the travel expenses of its counsel.

9. Demonstrative exhibits for trial

CRST seeks $ 78,023.24 for expenditures on demonstrative exhibits for trial. However, the court has reviewed the documentation for these expenses and can identify only $ 77,125.25 in expenditures. This amount consists of $ 841 paid to "T&M Services, Inc." to "move furniture to storage." CRST Fee Application Attachment 7I (docket no. 282-21), at 3. The remaining $ 76,284.25 was paid to "TrialGraphix" to "begin preparation of trial exhibits." Fees Brief at 5. The EEOC objects to the entire amount on the grounds that the expenses are too vague and imprecise to allow the court to conclude if these expenses are reasonable.

The court finds that the documentation supporting this expense is insufficient and the court shall therefore deny this request in its entirety. The $ 841 invoice from T&M Services states only that the fee was paid to "COMPLETE MQVES, MOVE FURNITURE TO STORAGE." CRST Fee Application Attachment 7I at 3 (emphasis in original). Similarly, the TrialGraphix invoice states that CRST paid TrialGraphix $ 75,000 for "Processing/Stamping & Printing/Binding Project Special Pricing." Id. at 4. The court is unable to discern from the documentation what services were performed and how they relate to this lawsuit. Without this information, the court cannot meaningfully consider whether these expenses are reasonable. See, e.g., H.J. Inc., 925 F.2d at 260-61 (discussing propriety of reducing fee award based on inadequate documentation). Accordingly, the court shall deny CRST's request for expenses related to demonstrative exhibits.

10. Videotaped depositions

As discussed in Section IV.B.1-2., supra, the court declines to award CRST $ 70,855.52 for videotaped depositions under § 1920. CRST argues that it is nonetheless entitled to this amount as part of the attorneys' fee award. For the reasons previously discussed, the court finds that this expense was unnecessary and unreasonable. See Jadari v. Shiba Inv., Inc., No. 06-5012-RHB, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98204, 2008 WL 5100812, at *10 (D.S.D. Dec. 3, 2008) (awarding costs of court reporter but denying expenses for videotaped depositions as an "unreasonable" expense). CRST also obtained stenographic transcripts of the depositions and has not offered a persuasive reason for obtaining both stenographic transcripts and video recordings of every deposition. Even if this case had gone to trial, CRST has not shown that any witnesses were likely to be unavailable or that video recordings of depositions would otherwise be useful. Accordingly, the court shall deny this portion of CRST's fee request.

11. Additional video-related expenses

CRST also seeks $ 57,259.24 for its "costs of conversion of depositions to DVD, ASCII, condensation, postage, and delivery[.]" Fees Supplement at 4. In light of the court's conclusion that the videotaping of depositions was an unreasonable expenditure, the court declines to award these additional video-related expenses.

12. Exemplification and copies of papers

CRST requests "costs for exemplification and copies of papers in the amount of $ 119,185.55." Id. CRST originally sought this amount under 28 U.S.C. § 1920, which allows an award of such costs "where the copies are necessarily obtained for use in the case." 28 U.S.C. § 1920(4). The EEOC objected on the grounds that CRST's documentation was too vague and failed to identify what was printed and or/copied. The EEOC contended that this made it impossible to evaluate whether these copies were necessarily obtained for use in the case. The Clerk concluded that CRST's documentation was insufficient because it did not identify the purpose for the printing and copying and therefore refused to tax this amount as costs.

CRST now seeks this amount as reasonable out-of-pocket expenses as part of the attorneys' fee award.

The court finds that CRST is entitled to an award of the expenses incurred by its counsel for copying and printing. CRST submitted extensive documentation of its printing and copying costs.[8] This amount includes in-house printing by CRST's counsel, the rental of printing and/or copying machines and printing services by third parties. The court finds the documentation sufficient and the amount sought is reasonable in light of the thousands of documents, extensive research and motion practice that this case required. Although this expense may have been insufficiently documented to be taxed as costs, it is recoverable as part of the reasonable attorneys' fees. See, e.g., Emmenegger v. Bull Moose Tube Co., 33 F. Supp. 2d 1127, 1133-34 (E.D. Mo. 1998) (refusing to tax photocopying expenses as costs under § 1920 because plaintiffs failed to segregate the taxable costs but awarding full amount as part of attorneys' fee award). Accordingly, the court shall award CRST $ 119,185.55 for its printing and copying expenses.

8. Much of the documentation consists of printouts from Jenner's "nQueue" tracking software, which tracks printing and copying costs based on client matter numbers and then uploads the automated transactions to Jenner's billing system "in order to recover the costs associated with the print/copy work." Bill of Costs Schedule D (docket no. 280-4), at 2.

13. Fees for preparation of fee application

CRST stated in its Brief in support of the Fees Motion that it sought an award of the fees incurred to prepare the Fees Motion and that it would "submit a supplemental filing detailing the total fees incurred with preparation of this petition once briefing is concluded." Fees Brief at 26. In the Supplement, however, CRST states that it "seeks only the nominal fees incurred in preparation of its Fee Petition that have already been submitted to the Court." Supplement at 2. The court interprets this to mean that CRST does not seek additional attorneys' fees for preparation of the Fees Motion other than the fees that the court has already considered. Accordingly, the court does not award an additional amount for the preparation of the Fees Motion.

14. Summary

Based on the foregoing, the court finds that CRST is entitled to an award of reasonable out-of-pocket expenses in the amount of $ 463,071.25. This amount will be added to the $ 4,004,371.65 the court shall award for the services of CRST's counsel. This yields a total attorneys' fee award of $ 4,467,442.90.

VI. CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing, it is HEREBY ORDERED THAT:

(1) The Costs Motion (docket no. 306) is DENIED;

(2) The Fees Motion (docket no. 282) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(a) The EEOC is ORDERED to pay CRST $ 4,004,371.65 in attorneys' fees; and

(b) The EEOC is ORDERED to pay CRST $ 463,071.25 in expenses, for a total attorneys' fees award of $ 4,467,442.90;

(4) The Clerk of Court is DIRECTED to ENTER JUDGMENT in favor of CRST in the amount of $ 4,560,285.11. This figure includes attorneys' fees, expenses and the costs taxed in favor of CRST pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1920; and

(5) The Clerk of Court is DIRECTED to CLOSE THIS CASE.

ORDER

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s "Motion for Summary Judgment Against Class Members Whose Claims Fail on Two or More Grounds" ("Motion") (docket no. 149).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS[1]

On February 13, 2009, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("the EEOC") filed a Resistance (docket no. 166). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket no. 179).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. See LR 7(c). The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

III. STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

1. The court assumes complete familiarity with the prior proceedings.

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394, 395 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). The nonmoving party must offer proof "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. "'Evidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment.'" Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., 447 F.3d 569, 578

(8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Mayer v. Nextel W. Corp., 318 F.3d 803, 809 (8th Cir. 2003)).

IV. RELEVANT LAW

The relevant law is set forth in the court's Order (docket no. 256) of July 6, 2009 and Order (docket no. 251) of June 18, 2009. The court need not repeat the relevant law here.

V. THE MERITS

A. Outline of Arguments

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of fifty-five allegedly aggrieved persons.[2] CRST argues the EEOC has provided the court with insufficient evidence to prove that these fifty-five allegedly aggrieved persons suffered actionable sexual harassment. With respect to nearly all of the fifty-five allegedly aggrieved persons, CRST argues (1) the allegedly aggrieved person did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment and, in the alternative, (2) there is insufficient evidence CRST knew or should have known of the alleged sexual harassment but failed to take proper remedial action.

2. The Motion lists only fifty-four allegedly aggrieved persons, but the court previously indicated it would consider the allegations of Ms. Linda Skaggs in conjunction with the instant Order. See Order (docket no. 223), at 22-23, 26.

The EEOC concedes four of the fifty-five allegedly aggrieved persons, Mss. Kathy Cannoles, Madeline Lovins, Laura Taylor and Laurie Thompson, did not suffer actionable sexual harassment. The EEOC resists the remainder of the Motion in its entirety.

B. Rulings

The court need not catalogue all of the sordid facts relating to each of the fifty-five allegedly aggrieved persons at issue in the Motion. After considering the parties' arguments in conjunction with the voluminous record before the court, the court rules as follows:

1. The EEOC concedes four women did not suffer actionable sexual harassment

On April 30, 2009, the court held that, to the extent the EEOC purported to assert a "pattern or practice claim" in this litigation, such claim must be dismissed. See Order (docket no. 197), passim. In light of such ruling, the EEOC concedes Mss. Kathy Cannoles, Madeline Lovins, Laura Taylor and Laurie Thompson did not suffer actionable sexual harassment.[3] Accordingly, the court shall grant

3. The EEOC's unwritten premise—that the mere presence of a "pattern or practice claim" would somehow save the "individual claims" of Mss. Cannoles, Lovins, Taylor and Thompson—is unsupported and unsound. See, e.g., Order (docket no. 197), at 26-32 (discussing Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 130 F.3d 1287 (8th Cir. 1997) and the EEOC's flawed proposal for a burden-shifting framework for sexual harassment cases); Order (docket no. 156), at 5-6 (foreclosing the EEOC from seeking "class-wide" punitive damages).

the Motion in part and bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of them at trial.

2. The court already barred the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of two women

On May 13, 2009, the court held the EEOC was judicially estopped from seeking relief on behalf of Mss. Christina Payne and Robin Timmons at trial, because they had failed to disclose their sexual harassment claims in their bankruptcy proceedings. Accordingly, the court shall deny the Motion in part as moot.[4]

3. A reasonable jury could not find forty-two women suffered actionable sexual harassment.

A reasonable jury could not find forty-two of the allegedly aggrieved persons at issue in the Motion suffered actionable sexual harassment. Specifically, the court holds:

For the reasons expressed in Part V.B. 1 of the court's Order (docket no. 256) of July 6, 2009, the court shall grant the Motion in part and hold that a reasonable jury could not find that two women, Mss. Sylvia Griffith

4. Even if the court had not already barred the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of Mss. Payne and Timmons, the court would do so now. Ms. Payne did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment. There is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST knew or should have known Ms. Timmons was sexually harassed yet failed to take prompt and effective remedial action.

and Linda Skaggs, suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment. The court need not decide whether there is sufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST knew or should have known Ms. Griffith or Ms. Skaggs suffered sexual harassment yet failed to take proper remedial action.

For the reasons expressed in Parts V. A and V. B of the court's Order (docket no. 251) of June 18, 2009, the court shall grant the Motion in part and hold that there is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST knew or should have known that the following nineteen women suffered sexual harassment yet failed to take proper remedial action: Mss. Antoinette Baldwin, Mary Beaton, Natasha Brown, Catherine Coronado, Catherine Fletcher, Angelene Gatewood, Zainabu Jenga, Diane Johnson, Bonnie Moesch, Leah Meyers-Graham, Tammi Pile, Sharon Pinchem, Donna Quigley, Danette Quintanilla,[5] Janet Ranney, Kathleen Seymour, Mary "Emily" Smith, Jennifer Susson and Betsy Ybarra. The court need not decide whether any of these nineteen women suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment.

5. The EEOC does not argue CRST should have known of the sexual harassment of Ms. Quintanilla because there is circumstantial evidence to show that CRST knew her harasser had previously sexually harassed another woman but did not take reasonable steps to prevent recidivism. The court deems any such argument to be waived. Cf. Order (docket no. 251), at 10 (declining to bar the EEOC from seeking anything less than full relief at trial on behalf of three women, because there was circumstantial evidence to show CRST knew their harassers had previously sexually harassed other women and did nothing about it).

Appendix F

With respect to twenty-one women, Mss. Kristi Allen, Linda Connor, Tamara Demery, Dorothy Dockery, DeQuinda Harris, Debra Hindes, Tracy Hughes, Brenda Kennett,[6] Patricia Marzett, Virginia Mason, Lucinda McBlair, Nona McCuien, Rosalyn McDaniels, Darlene Miller, Sherry O'Donnell, Shirley Parker, Sheree Phillips, Peggy Pratt, Jonne Shepler, Christine Taylor and Sharon Wyrick, the court grants the Motion in its entirety. The claims of these twenty-one women fail on multiple grounds. For the reasons expressed in Part V.B. 1 of the court's Order (docket no. 256) of July 6, 2009, the court holds that a reasonable jury could not find that any of these twenty-one women suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment. In the alternative, for the reasons expressed in Parts V.A and V.B of the court's Order (docket no. 251) of June 18, 2009, the court holds there is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST knew or should have known that any of the foregoing twenty-one women suffered sexual harassment yet failed to take proper remedial action.

Accordingly, the court shall grant the Motion in part and bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of the foregoing forty-two women at trial.[7]

6. Mr. Larry Caruso's actions do not constitute severe or pervasive sexual harassment. There is no evidence Ms. Kennett reported the actions of any other coworkers to CRST.

7. The court notes that the EEOC did not make the argument set forth in Part V.D of the court's Order (docket no. 251) of June 18, 2009. The court deems any such argument for partial relief to be waived.

4. A reasonable jury could find seven women suffered actionable sexual harassment

The court holds that a reasonable jury could find that seven allegedly aggrieved persons, Mss. Gwen Allen, Stacy Barager, Denise Roundtree,[8] Jammie Scott,[9] Annette Smith, Rebecca Waisr and Tiani Warden-Thompson,[10] suffered actionable sexual harassment. A reasonable jury could find each of these seven women suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment. A reasonable jury could also find CRST knew or should have known of the alleged sexual harassment but failed to take proper remedial action with respect to each woman.

Accordingly, the court shall decline to bar the EEOC from pursing relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Allen, Barager, Roundtree, Scott, Smith, Waisr or Warden-Thompson.

8. Only Mr. Christian Turner's actions are actionable. Mr. Michael Worth did not sexually harass Ms. Roundtree. Mr. Worth only (1) listened to a radio station on which radio personalities used profanity and talked about sex and (2) smelled Ms. Roundtree's pillow.

9. Only Mr. Mike Robertson's actions are actionable. There is no evidence Ms. Scott reported the actions of any other coworkers to CRST.

10. With respect to Ms. Warden-Thompson, there is no evidence CRST knew about her severe or pervasive sexual harassment. At most, a reasonable jury could find CRST should have known about it.

Appendix F

VI. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 149) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(1) The EEOC is BARRED from seeking relief at trial on behalf of forty-eight allegedly aggrieved persons: Mss. Kristi Allen, Antoinette Baldwin, Mary Beaton, Natasha Brown, Kathy Cannoles, Linda Connor, Catherine Coronado, Tamara Demery, Dorothy Dockery, Catherine Fletcher, Angelene Gatewood, Sylvia Griffith, DeQuinda Harris, Debra Hindes, Tracy Hughes, Zainabu Jenga, Diane Johnson, Brenda Kennett, Madeline Lovins, Patricia Marzett, Virginia Mason, Lucinda McBlair, Nona McCuien, Rosalyn McDaniels, Leah Meyers-Graham, Darlene Miller, Bonnie Moesch, Sherry O'Donnell, Shirley Parker, Christina Payne, Sheree Phillips, Tammi Pile, Sharon Pinchem, Peggy Pratt, Donna Quigley, Danette Quintanilla, Janet Ranney, Kathleen Seymour, Jonne Shepler, Linda Skaggs, Mary "Emily" Smith, Jennifer Susson, Christine Taylor, Laura Taylor, Laurie Thompson, Robin Timmons, Sharon Wyrick and Betsy Ybarra.

(2) The court declines to bar the EEOC from seeking full relief at trial on behalf of seven allegedly aggrieved persons: Mss. Gwen Allen, Stacy Barager, Denise Roundtree, Jammie Scott, Annette Smith, Rebecca Waisr and Tiani Warden-Thompson.

(3) The EEOC is ORDERED to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before July 13, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s "Motion for Summary Judgment Against Class Members Who Did Not Experience Severe or Pervasive Sexual Harassment" ("Motion") (docket no. 148).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS[1]

On February 13, 2009, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("the EEOC") filed a Resistance (docket no. 164). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket no. 183).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. See LR 7.c. The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

III. STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005)

1. The court assumes complete familiarity with the prior proceedings.

(quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. *Baer Gallery, Inc. v. IV. SUMMARY OF THE RELEVANT LAW

Title VII makes it unlawful for an employer "to discriminate against any individual with respect to [her] compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's . . . sex . . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1). "The Supreme Court has determined . . . that sexual harassment 'sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment and create an abusive working environment' qualifies as [unlawful] sex discrimination under Title VII." Adams v. O'Reilly Auto., Inc., 538 F.3d 926, 928 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting Meritor Savs. Bank v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67 (1986)). In Meritor, the Supreme Court explained:

> The phrase "terms, conditions, or privileges of employment" [within 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1)] evinces a congressional intent to strike at the entire spectrum of disparate treatment of men and women in employment.
> [S]exual misconduct constitutes prohibited sexual harassment, whether or not it is directly linked to the grant or denial of an economic quid pro quo, where such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment.

> Surely, a requirement that a man or woman run a gauntlet of sexual abuse in return for the privilege of being allowed to work and make a living can be as demeaning and disconcerting as the harshest of racial epithets.
> Of course . . . not all workplace conduct that may be described as "harassment" affects a "term, condition, or privilege" of employment within the meaning of Title VII. For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.

To prove sex discrimination based upon a hostile work environment theory of sexual harassment, then, a plaintiff must prove "(1) the plaintiff belongs to a protected group; (2) the plaintiff was subject to unwelcome harassment; (3) a causal nexus exists between the harassment and the plaintiff's protected group status; and (4) the harassment affected a term, condition, or privilege of employment." Gordon v. Shafer Contracting Co., 469 F.3d 1191, 1194-95 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Al-Zubaidy v. TEK Indus., Inc., 406 F.3d 1030, 1038 (8th Cir. 2005)). In addition, > if the harassment was committed by a co-worker, [a plaintiff] must . . . establish that [the employer] "knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action." Dhyne v. Meiners Thriftway, Inc., 184 F.3d 983, 987 (8th Cir. 1999). On the other hand, if the harassment was committed by an employee who supervised [the plaintiff], [the employer] is vicariously liable for the harassment unless it can establish the affirmative defense defined in Burlington Indus., Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 765 (1998), and Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 807-08 (1998).

Joens v. John Morrell & Co., 354 F.3d 938, 940 (8th Cir. 2004). That is,

> [the employer] is vicariously liable for harassment by its supervisory personnel unless it can establish that (1) [it] exercised reasonable care to prevent and promptly correct any harassing behavior; and (2) [the plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of the preventive or corrective opportunities provided by [the employer]. [Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 765]. An employer may assert the affirmative defense only "[w]hen no tangible employment action is taken." [Faragher, 524 U.S. at 807-08].

2. This court has repeatedly held that CRST's trainers and co-drivers were the allegedly aggrieved persons' coworkers and not their supervisors. See, e.g., Order (docket no. 197), at 60-61; Order (docket no. 249), at 17-18 & n.9; Order (docket no. 251), at 3 n.2.

Appendix G

To prove sexual harassment is sufficiently unwelcome to be actionable under Title VII, a plaintiff must meet an objective standard and a subjective standard regarding the harassment itself. With respect to the objective standard, the Supreme Court has made clear over the years that "[c]onduct that is not severe or pervasive enough to create an objectively hostile or abusive work environment—an environment that a reasonable person would find hostile or abusive—is beyond Title VII's purview." Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 21 (1993). With respect to the subjective standard, it is settled that, "if the victim does not subjectively perceive the environment to be abusive, the conduct has not actually altered the conditions of the victim's employment, and there is no Title VII violation." Harris, 510 U.S. at 21-22.

"Hostile work environment claims are assessed based on the totality of the circumstances." O'Brien v. Dep't of Agric., 532 F.3d 805, 809 (8th Cir. 2008). Relevant factors include but are not limited to "the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; its severity; whether it is physically threatening or humiliating; or a mere offensive utterance; and whether it unreasonably interferes with an employee's work performance." Harris, 510 U.S. at 23. "[N]o single factor is required." Id.

It is imperative to remember, however, that

> [h]ostile work environment claims are limited in nature, requiring a high evidentiary showing that the plaintiff's workplace is "permeated with discriminatory intimidation, ridicule, and > insult that is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment and create an abusive working environment."

Vajdl v. Mesabi Acad. of KidsPeace, Inc., 484 F.3d 546, 550 (8th Cir. 2007) (quoting Harris, 510 U.S. at 21)); see also Nitsche v. CEO of Osage Valley Elec. Co-op., 446 F.3d 841, 846 (8th Cir. 2006) (requiring hostile work environment plaintiffs to "clear a high threshold to demonstrate actionable harm"); Al-Zubaidy, 406 F.3d at 1039 (requiring hostile work environment plaintiffs to meet "demanding harassment standards"). "Title VII does not mandate an employment environment worthy of a Victorian salon." Hall v. Gus Constr. Co., 842 F.2d 1010, 1017 (8th Cir. 1988). "White gloves, crystal, and fine china are neither required nor expected." Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 139 F.R.D. 657, 662 (D. Minn. 1991). Title VII was not designed to "displace all ribaldry on the roadway," and "[o]ne may well expect that . . . language of the barracks will always predominate over that of the ballroom." Hall, 842 F.2d at 1017-18.

V. THE MERITS

A. Outline of Arguments

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of nineteen allegedly aggrieved persons: Mss. Tressie Abbott, Christie Basye, Andrea Cantrell, Deborah Carey, Meredith Carney, Margaret Daniels, Dolores Ferrell, Victoria Holmes, January Jackson, Tillie Jones, Angela Lesmeister, Faith McDaniel, Patricia Merritt, Debra Moorer, Julie Noernberg, Anya Owens, Isabel Perez, Esther Steanhouse and Tameisha Wilson. CRST argues the EEOC has provided the court with insufficient evidence to prove that these nineteen allegedly aggrieved persons suffered actionable sexual harassment. CRST's primary argument with respect to each of the aggrieved persons is that they did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment.

The EEOC concedes that Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment but resists the remainder of the Motion. The EEOC maintains Mss. Abbott, Carey, Daniels, Holmes, Jackson, Jones, Lesmeister, McDaniel, Merritt, Moorer, Noernberg, Owens, Perez, Steanhouse and Wilson suffered actionable sexual harassment.

B. Analysis

The court need not catalogue all of the sordid facts relating to each of the nineteen allegedly aggrieved persons at issue in the Motion. After considering the parties' arguments in conjunction with the voluminous record before the court, the court rules as follows:

1. The EEOC concedes Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell did not suffer actionable sexual harassment

On April 30, 2009, the court held that, to the extent the EEOC purported to assert a "pattern or practice claim" in this litigation, such claim must be dismissed. See Order

(docket no. 197), passim. In light of such ruling, the EEOC concedes that Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment. The EEOC writes:

> [The] EEOC contends [Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell] suffered harassment and thus their claims should not be dismissed if this court allows the pattern and practice claim to proceed. [The] EEOC, however, concedes that their claims do not meet the severe or pervasive standard if treated as individual claims.

Resistance (docket no. 164), at 5 (footnote omitted).

Accordingly, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell.[3]

2. A reasonable jury could find that Mss. Carey, Daniels, Lesmeister, Merritt, Moorer, Noernberg, Owens and Wilson suffered actionable sexual harassment

The court holds that a reasonable jury could find

3. In any event, the EEOC's unwritten premise—that the mere presence of a "pattern or practice claim" would somehow save the "individual claims" of Mss. Basye, Cantrell, Carney and Ferrell—is unsupported and unsound. See, e.g., id. at 26-32 (discussing Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 130 F.3d 1287 (8th Cir. 1997) and the EEOC's flawed proposal for a burden-shifting framework for sexual harassment cases); Order (docket no. 156), at 5-6 (foreclosing the EEOC from seeking "class-wide" punitive damages).

that Mss. Carey, Daniels, Lesmeister, Merritt, Moorer, Noernberg, Owens and Wilson suffered actionable sexual harassment. A reasonable jury could find each woman suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment. The allegations of Ms. Carey and Ms. Wilson are illustrative.

Ms. Carey worked for CRST as a truck driver from June 21, 2006 to March 28, 2008. She testified in her deposition that, during such time, ten of her fourteen co-drivers sexually harassed her. The sexual harassment included inappropriate sexually charged comments, "a brush here or a feel there," Def.'s App'x at 69, propositions for sexual intercourse and professions of love. One co-driver fondled her while she was sleeping in her bed. And when Ms. Carey refused one co-worker's sexual advances, he booted her off their truck and left her abandoned at a truck stop for a few hours. Ms. Carey complained about some of this conduct early on to no avail. Such evidence is sufficient to survive summary judgment. See, e.g., Howard v. Burns Bros., Inc., 149 F.3d 835, 840 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding there was sufficient evidence to show the plaintiff suffered actionable sexual harassment, where there was evidence the plaintiff experienced unwanted physical contact and chronic sexual innuendo).

Ms. Tameisha Wilson's sworn allegations are even more disconcerting. Ms. Wilson worked for CRST from December 13, 2006 to March 18, 2007. Ms. Wilson was one of CRST's lead drivers. One of her trainees, Mr. Darryl Lewis, sexually harassed her. Mr. Lewis constantly propositioned Ms. Wilson for sexual intercourse, asked her if he could touch parts of her body, tried to grab her breasts every night, tried to jump on top of her, tried to burn her with a cigarette, punched her in the jaw and tried to choke her. He called her a "bitch," told her "what happens on the truck stays on the truck," referred to himself as "The Pimp of Memphis," and stated that he knew she wanted him and no one could refuse his sexual advances. Def.'s App'x at 3363. Ms. Wilson repeatedly complained about the sexual harassment to her dispatcher, but her dispatcher refused to help her. Instead, the dispatcher told Ms. Wilson to "try to stick it out." Id. CRST's argument that Ms. Wilson did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment is wholly unsupported in fact and law. Indeed, all of the aggravating factors in Harris are present.

Accordingly, the court shall decline to bar the EEOC from pursing relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Carey, Daniels, Lesmeister, Merritt, Moorer, Noernberg, Owens and Wilson.

3. A reasonable jury could not find that Mss. Abbott, Holmes, Jackson, Jones, McDaniel, Perez or Steanhouse suffered actionable sexual harassment

The court holds that a reasonable jury could not find that Mss. Abbott, Holmes, Jackson, Jones, McDaniel, Perez or Steanhouse suffered actionable sexual harassment. A reasonable jury could not find these women suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment or, in the case of Ms. Jackson, that CRST "knew or should have known of the [sexual harassment] and failed to take proper remedial action." Dhyne v. Meiners Thriftway, Inc., 184 F.3d 983, 987 (8th Cir. 1999).[4] The allegations of Ms. Abbott, Perez and Steanhouse are illustrative.

Ms. Abbott worked for CRST from December 21, 2006 to February 15, 2007. Ms. Abbott alleges that one of her trainers, Mr. Gene Garrett, sexual harassed her. Ms. Abbott rode with Mr. Garrett from December 22, 2006 until January 5, 2007. The EEOC argues Ms. Abbott was sexually harassed on January 4 or 5, 2007, when Mr. Garrett told her a story. As Ms. Abbott was driving their semi-truck somewhere in Kansas, Mr. Garrett told Ms. Abbott that he had been a juror in a child molestation

4. Ms. Jackson did not report sexual harassment to CRST until after she left her truck. CRST may not be held liable for sexual harassment it could not stop and that had already ended by the time it was made aware of it. See, e.g., Anda v. Wickes Furn. Co., 517 F.3d 526, 532 (8th Cir. 2008) (affirming dismissal of sexual harassment claim in part because plaintiff failed to fully notify her employer of the harassment and there was no other evidence in the record that tended to show that the employer should have known of the harassment); Cheshewalla v. Rand & Son Constr. Co., 415 F.3d 847, 851 (8th Cir. 2005) (similar); Whitmore v. O'Connor Mgmt., Inc., 156 F.3d 796, 800 (8th Cir. 1998) (similar); Bombaci v. Journal Cmty. Publ'g Group, Inc., 482 F.3d 979, 983-84 (7th Cir. 2007) (similar); Woods v. Delta Beverage Group, Inc., 274 F.3d 295, 299-300 (5th Cir. 2001) (similar). Further, the EEOC has not presented the court with evidence that CRST's response to Ms. Jackson's complaint was ineffective per se. Cf. Hostetler v. Quality Dining, Inc., 218 F.3d 798, 811 (7th Cir. 2000); Guess v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 913 F.2d 463, 465 (7th Cir. 1990); Order (docket no. 251), at 10-13. While the EEOC complains about CRST's inclusion of a "failure to report" argument in the Motion, nothing in the court's prior orders precludes the inclusion of the argument in the Motion. In any event, the court discerns no prejudice to the EEOC.

case. Ms. Abbott repeatedly told Mr. Garrett she did not want to hear his story, but Mr. Garrett persisted for about eight to ten minutes. Mr. Garrett stated:

> [T]he cases that [I] sat in on was [sic] about two little girls, and the dad took the one little girl in and set [sic] her on her bedroom [sic], took all her clothes off and spread her legs and brought the other little girl in and spread her legs and put his hands on both of them.

Def.'s App'x at 8.[5] Ms. Abbott did not believe Mr. Garrett served on a jury. Ms. Abbott testified:

> [I did not believe he served on a jury] [b]ecause he had told me that formerly he had two daughters and he hadn't spoken to them in years because their grandmother had told them if they would stay away from their dad she would send them to college, and I asked him if they had graduated college, and he said he did not know, he had not spoken to them since they were little girls; and in my mind I just thought that those little girls were like me; they got molested.

5. CRST's eleventh uncontested individual statement of material fact misquotes the deposition transcript. CRST erroneously substituted "put his hands in both of them" in lieu of "put his hands on both of them."

> [J]ust the way he talked about it, it was like he was kind of excited to tell me the story. Maybe that was just in my mind.

Id. at 18. Ms. Abbott "killed the truck" until Mr. Garrett stopped. Id. She then restarted the truck and continued driving until they reached their destination in Colorado.

The EEOC concludes this single incident rises to the level of severe or pervasive sexual harassment, because "[Ms.] Abbott was alone on a truck with a man who she had good reason to believe was a child molester who was eager to force his captive audience to hear all the details of what he had done to his children." Resistance (docket no. 164), at 18. Even if the court assumes Ms. Abbott reasonably believed Mr. Garrett was telling her a story about how he sexually molested his own daughters, this single incident clearly does not rise to the level of severe or pervasive sexual harassment. See, e.g., Powell v. Yellow Book USA, Inc., 445 F.3d 1074, 1077 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding that "several instances where [the alleged harasser] talked about her . . . sexual exploits outside the office, described particular fantasies that she harbored concerning co-workers, and propositioned [the plaintiff] for sex" was not sufficiently severe or pervasive to affect a term, condition or privilege of employment); Hudson v. M.S. Carriers, Inc., 335 F. Supp. 2d 853, 856-57 & 862 (W.D. Tenn. 2003) (holding that a plaintiff did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment, where her alleged harasser (1) asked her about her underwear, (2) told her "he went to a strip bar and swiped the stripper's rear end with his credit card," (3) pretended his pencil was his penis and (4) took off his shoe and touched her with his feet), aff'd, 126 F. App'x 297 (6th Cir. 2005). The mere recounting of one ten minute story about one's sexual exploits, no matter how foul, disgusting or even criminal, does not constitute severe or pervasive sexual harassment. The unique nature of CRST's working environment, while certainly a factor that may be considered in the totality of the circumstances, cannot by itself transform a single incident into severe or pervasive sexual harassment.

Ms. Perez has worked for CRST since August of 2008. She alleges her first trainer, Mr. Giles Lopez, sexually harassed her. However, it is undisputed that Mr. Lopez never propositioned Ms. Perez for sexual intercourse and never touched her in a sexual manner. Rather, Ms. Perez complains that she did not get along with Mr. Lopez. Among other things, Mr. Lopez repeatedly swore at Ms. Perez (calling her a "fucking bitch" and a "son of a bitch"), told her she was a bad truck driver, and raised his arm as if to hit her. Mr. Lopez also refused to allow Ms. Perez to use a restroom or shower, because he did not want to stop the truck and delay delivery of their load. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals has observed:

> Title VII does proscribe gender-based harassment even when it is not motivated by sexual desire, and it is true that "[c]ourts should avoid disaggregating a hostile work environment claim, dividing conduct into instances of sexually oriented conduct and instances of unequal treatment, then discounting the latter category of conduct," > thereby robbing instances of gender-based harassment of their cumulative effect. However, none of this helps [the plaintiff], because she offers nothing suggesting that the . . . harassment was motivated by her gender . . . . While the cases . . . correctly stress that gender-based harassment need not be overtly sexual and may include ridicule, ostracism, and other forms of hostility motivated by an anti-female animus, they do not hold that hostile behavior by co-workers is actionable as sexual harassment even if it not based on gender.

Berry v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 260 F.3d 803, 810-11 (7th Cir. 2001) (citing in part Williams v. General Motors Corp., 187 F.3d 553, 565 (6th Cir. 1999) (holding that a plaintiff must show that "but for the fact of her sex, she would not have been the object of harassment")). Even when taken in the light most favorable to the EEOC, there is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record from which a jury could reasonably find Mr. Lopez's conduct was based on gender as opposed to simply a personality conflict. There is little evidence in the record Mr. Lopez would have treated Ms. Perez any differently were she male.[6] It is at least equally likely that he simply did not like her, and a reasonably jury would have to speculate to conclude that her gender was the root cause of his nasty actions.

6. There is some evidence Mr. Lopez did not believe a woman could drive better than a man, but it is undisputed that Ms. Perez never reported such a comment to CRST's management.

Appendix G

Ms. Steanhouse worked for CRST from December of 2007 to October of 2008. The EEOC alleges Ms. Steanhouse was subjected to severe or pervasive sexual harassment when, on or about December 14, 2007, Ms. Steanhouse's trainer, Mr. Rodderick Jones, sent her a text message that stated "when he returned from the store he wanted [Ms. Steanhouse] to get in his bed." Def.'s App'x at 3012. Aside from this single text message, Mr. Jones did not do or say anything else to Ms. Steanhouse that could be construed as sexual harassment. At no point did he ever physically contact Ms. Steanhouse in a sexually untoward manner. The EEOC's argument that Ms. Steanhouse suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment is not well-taken, because it is long-settled that a single proposition for sex is not actionable. See, e.g., Duncan v. General Motors Corp., 300 F.3d 928, 931-35 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that "a single request for a relationship, which was not repeated when she rebuffed it, four or five isolated incidents of Booth briefly touching her hand, a request to draw a planter, and teasing in the form of a poster and beliefs for an imaginary club" did not constitute actionable sexual harassment).

Accordingly, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Abbott, Holmes, Jackson, Jones, McDaniel, Perez or Steanhouse.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 148) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(1) The EEOC is BARRED from seeking relief at trial on behalf of eleven allegedly aggrieved persons: Mss. Tressie Abbott, Christie Basye, Andrea Cantrell, Meredith Carney, Dolores Ferrell, Victoria Holmes, January Jackson, Tillie Jones, Faith McDaniel, Isabel Perez and Esther Steanhouse.

(2) The court declines to bar the EEOC from seeking full relief at trial on behalf of eight allegedly aggrieved persons: Mss. Deborah Carey, Margaret Daniels, Angela Lesmeister, Patricia Merritt, Debra Moorer, Julie Noernberg, Anya Owens and Tameisha Wilson.

(3) The EEOC is ORDERED to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before July 9, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s "Motion for Summary Judgment Based on Class Members' Failure to Report the Alleged Harassment and/or CRST's Prompt and Effective Response to Reported Harassment" ("Motion") (docket no. 146).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS[1]

On February 13, 2009, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") filed a Resistance (docket no. 162). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket nos. 181 & 182).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. See LR 7.c. The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

1. The court assumes complete familiarity with the prior proceedings.

III. STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394, 395 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). The nonmoving party must offer proof "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. "'Evidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment.'" Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., 447 F.3d 569, 578 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Mayer v. Nextel W. Corp., 318 F.3d 803, 809 (8th Cir. 2003)).

IV. SUMMARY OF THE RELEVANT LAW

Under Title VII, it is generally unlawful for an employer to discriminate against a woman because of her sex. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1). Sexual harassment in the form of a hostile work environment may constitute unlawful sex discrimination. Meritor Sav. Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 64, 106 S. Ct. 2399, 91 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1986).

To prove a claim of an actionable hostile work environment by non-supervisory coworkers,[2] a plaintiff must prove five elements. The plaintiff must prove

2. Again, the court holds that CRST's trainers and co-drivers were the allegedly aggrieved persons' coworkers and not their supervisors. See, e.g., Order (docket no. 197), at 60-61; Order (docket no. 249), at 17-18 & n.9; see also Morgan v. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., No. 05-CV-181-JAJ, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7566, 2007 WL 402407, *8 n.4 (N.D. Iowa Feb. 1, 2007) (noting plaintiff conceded that CRST's trainers and co-drivers were coworkers and not supervisors for purposes of Title VII).

> (1) she is a member of a protected group; (2) unwelcome harassment occurred; (3) a causal nexus existed between the harassment and her protected-group status; (4) the harassment affected a term, condition, or privilege of employment; and (5) her employer knew or should have known of the harassment and failed to take prompt and effective remedial action.

Austin v. Minn. Mining & Mfg. Co., 193 F.3d 992, 993 (8th Cir. 1999); Cherry v. Menard, Inc., 101 F. Supp. 2d 1160, 1178-79 (N.D. Iowa 2000) (Bennett, C.J.).

The fifth element, i.e., that the "employer knew or should have known of the harassment and failed to take prompt and effective remedial action," tethers the employer to the conduct of an arguably rogue employee. This element is a necessary component of the plaintiff's prima facie case because > there is no vicarious liability for co-worker harassment. What applies instead is a negligence standard; that is, an employer will be held liable for an atmosphere of sexual harassment by co-workers only if it knew or should have known of the harassment and failed to act. . . . .

3 Lex K. Larson, Employment Discrimination § 46.07[3], at 46-129-30 (2d ed. Oct. 2008).

Whether there is sufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to support the inference that the employer knew about the plaintiff's sexual harassment will, of course, depend on the circumstances of each case. See id. § 46.07[3], at 46-130 ("[R]esults in each case simply depend on an interpretation of the facts . . . .").

> Actual notice may be found if the employee reported the harassment to the [employer]'s personnel office or equal employment office, to management personnel who are designated in [the employer's] policies as the appropriate recipients of such complaints, to other appropriate management personnel who are authorized to take such complaints, or to the EEOC or relevant state anti[-]discrimination agency. Even if harassment is not reported, the employer may be held to be on notice if an authorized supervisor actually witnessed the harassment. It is also not necessary for a plaintiff to follow the [employer]'s precise reporting procedures for the [employer] to be imputed with notice.

Id. § 46.07[3], at 46-131-32.

Whether a reasonable jury could find the employer should have known about the sexual harassment of the plaintiff also depends on the circumstances of each case. See id. § 46.07[3], at 46-130. In some cases, "notice may be presumed where the work environment is permeated with pervasive harassment." Wilson v. Chrysler Corp., 172 F.3d 500, 509 (7th Cir. 1999), abrogated on other grounds by Cleveland v. Policy Mgmt. Sys. Corp., 526 U.S. 795, 802-07, 119 S. Ct. 1597, 143 L. Ed. 2d 966 (1999). For example, notice may be presumed when the plaintiff worked in "a peculiarly communal employment forum" and the sexual harassment occurred "in common areas," "in open view," "in the presence of other employees" and "was public and deliberately exhibitionist." Id. Under such circumstances, a reasonable jury could infer management was not "oblivious to such openly hostile behavior." Id.; see, e.g., Franklin v. King Lincoln-Mercury-Suzuki, Inc., 51 F. Supp. 2d 661, 666 (D. Md. 1999) (holding a reasonable jury could find the employer had constructive notice of coworker sexual harassment where "virtually all of the alleged acts of sexual harassment[, including a penis measuring contest, verbal abuse and sexually explicit gestures,] took place on the showroom floor of the dealership which, by design, is a distinctively communal employment forum"). Notice may also be presumed if sexual harassment at the employer's plant was general knowledge and management had received prior sexual harassment complaints about the plaintiff's alleged harasser. Ciszewski v. Engineered Polymers Corp., 179 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1097-98 (D. Minn. 2001).

To show an employer "'failed to take proper remedial action,'" Joens v. John Morrell & Co., 354 F.3d 938, 940 (8th Cir. 2004) (citation omitted), the plaintiff must show the employer did not undertake a course of action "reasonably calculated to stop the harassment," Carter v. Chrysler Corp., 173 F.3d 693, 702 (8th Cir. 1999).

Appendix H

> Factors in assessing the reasonableness of remedial measures may include the amount of time that elapsed between the notice and remedial action, the options available to the employer, possibly including employee training sessions, transferring the harassers, written warnings, reprimands in personnel files, or termination, and whether or not the measures ended the harassment.

Id. (citations omitted). "The promptness and adequacy of an employer's response will often be a question of fact for the factfinder to resolve." Id.

"As one might predict, examples of improper employer action abound, ranging from dilatory or inadequate discipline of the offender . . . ." 3 Lex K. Larson, Employment Discrimination § 46.07[3], at 46-135 (2d ed. Oct. 2008). Proper "corrective actions may take the form of promptly interviewing the alleged harasser and victim and many potential witnesses, reviewing any documentary or physical evidence and meting out appropriate discipline." Id. "Title VII does not necessarily require that an employer fire a harasser." Green v. Franklin Nat'l Bank of Minneapolis, 459 F.3d 903, 912 (8th Cir. 2006).

V. ANALYSIS

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief in this case on behalf of thirty-one[3]

3. The Motion only lists twenty-nine allegedly aggrieved persons. As previously indicated, however, the court considers allegedly aggrieved persons. CRST argues the EEOC has provided the court with insufficient evidence to prove that, with respect to each of the thirty-one allegedly aggrieved persons, CRST both (1) knew or should have known of sexual harassment and (2) failed to take prompt and effective remedial action. In other words, CRST maintains a reasonable jury would be unable to find the fifth elements of each of the sexual harassment "claims" of these thirty-one women to be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. The EEOC resists the Motion in its entirety.

The court need not catalogue for the reader all of the sordid facts relating to each of the thirty-one allegedly aggrieved persons at issue in the Motion. After considering the parties' arguments in conjunction with the voluminous record before the court, the court rules as follows:

A. CRST Did Not Know and Had No Reason to Know About the Sexual Harassment of Eleven Women

First, the court holds that there is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST knew or should have known that the following eleven women suffered sexual harassment: Mss. Bonnie Batyick, Christine Bell-Boyer, Bethany Broeker, Kim Chisolm, Samantha Cunningham, Denise Desonier, Jeana the parties' arguments with respect to Mss. Belinda Bedford and Faith Shadden in conjunction with the Motion. Order (docket no. 223), at 20-22 & 25.

Allen, Delila Katzka, Tina Lott, Vernona McIver and Rachel Tucker. Indeed, Mss. Bell-Boyer, Chisolm, Allen, Katzka, Lott and Tucker never informed CRST of the sexual harassment while they were working for CRST. By failing to report their alleged harassment promptly to CRST, these eleven women did not provide CRST with an opportunity to take remedial action reasonably calculated to end their harassment. CRST may not be held liable for sexual harassment it could not stop and that had already ended by the time it was made aware of it. See, e.g., Anda v. Wickes Furn. Co., 517 F.3d 526, 532 (8th Cir. 2008) (affirming dismissal of sexual harassment claim in part because plaintiff failed to fully notify her employer of the harassment and there was no other evidence in the record that tended to show that the employer should have known of the harassment); Cheshewalla v. Rand & Son Constr. Co., 415 F.3d 847, 851 (8th Cir. 2005) (affirming dismissal of coworker sexual harassment claim in part because the plaintiff failed to notify manager of sexual harassment until after the coworker had been reassigned to another jobsite); Whitmore v. O'Connor Mgmt., Inc., 156 F.3d 796, 800 (8th Cir. 1998) ("We believe that in cases not involving vicarious liability, employees have some obligation to inform their employers, either directly or otherwise, of behavior that they find objectionable before employers can be held responsible for failing to correct that behavior, at least ordinarily."); Bombaci v. Journal Cmty. Pub'g Group, Inc., 482 F.3d 979, 983-84 (7th Cir. 2007) ("A plaintiff alleging co-worker harassment must offer evidence that she notified the employer about the harassment or that the harassment was so pervasive that a jury may infer that the employer knew about it.");

Woods v. Delta Beverage Group, Inc., 274 F.3d 295, 299-300 (5th Cir. 2001) ("Delta Beverage cannot be held liable for conduct of which it had no knowledge. Woods had the obligation to report the alleged harassment to Delta Beverage as she had been instructed. Her failure to do so is fatal to her case.").

For example, Ms. Batyick alleges her trainer, Mr. Phillip Buckner, sexually harassed her. Mr. Buckner trained Ms. Batyick from January 27, 2008 to February 25, 2008. It is undisputed that Ms. Batyick did not report the alleged sexual harassment to management until the day she got off Mr. Buckner's truck. She had numerous opportunities to report the sexual harassment while training under Mr. Buckner but failed to do so. Indeed, on February 23, 2008, Ms. Batyick submitted a driver evaluation to CRST in which she rated Mr. Buckner a "five out of five" in the category of "appearance and actions were professional." Def.'s App'x at 310. At trial, the EEOC would be required to prove that CRST "'knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action.'" Joens, 354 F.3d at 940. The EEOC has failed to generate a genuine issue of material fact as to this element with respect to Ms. Batyick. CRST did not know about Mr. Buckner's conduct until after it ended even though CRST had trained Ms. Batyick to promptly report sexual harassment to management.

Likewise, the record is devoid of any evidence from which a reasonable jury might find CRST should have known Mr. Buckner was sexually harassing Ms. Batyick. There is no evidence CRST had reason to believe Mr.

Buckner may have sexually harassed other women before driving with Ms. Batyick. Cf. Ciszewski, 179 F. Supp. 2d at 1097-98. As the court recognized when it dismissed the EEOC's "pattern or practice claim," Order (docket no. 197), passim, the EEOC has not presented the court with any expert evidence to support its supposition that male truck drivers are likely to sexually harass their female coworkers due to CRST's "intrinsically coercive" business model. Brief in Support of Resistance (docket no. 168-1), at 4. Finally, CRST does not operate a unified workplace. As a consequence, the court may not simply presume management knew what was happening in the isolated cabs of eleven semi-truck tractors. Cf. Wilson, 172 F.3d at 509; Franklin, 51 F. Supp. 2d at 666.

Accordingly, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Batyick, Bell-Boyer, Broeker, Chisolm, Cunningham, Desonier, Allen, Katzka, Lott, McIver and Tucker.

B. CRST Adequately Addressed the Sexual Harassment Complaints of Four Women

Second, the court holds that there is insufficient evidence in the summary judgment record to show that CRST failed to adequately address the sexual harassment complaints of Mss. Maybi Fernandez-Fabre, Ginger Laudermilk, Faith Shadden and Diana Vance. To the extent these four women reported the sexual harassment they suffered to CRST in a timely manner, CRST responded appropriately under the circumstances. Indeed, Ms. Vance expressly refused CRST's attempt to remove her from a bad situation.

Accordingly, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Fernandez-Fabre, Laudermilk, Shadden[4] and Vance.

C. The EEOC May Seek Full Relief on Behalf of Eight Women at Trial

Third, the court declines to bar the EEOC from seeking anything less than full relief at trial on behalf of eight women: Mss. Belinda Bedford, Mary Bender, Lillie Bingaman, Darleaner Deese, Cynthia Fisk, Robryna Fitch, Pamela Hoffman and Bobbi O'Dell. A reasonable jury could find CRST should have known about the sexual harassment of Mss. Bedford, Fisk and O'Dell, because there is circumstantial evidence to show CRST knew that their harassers had previously sexually harassed other women but CRST did not take reasonable steps to prevent recidivism. Cf. Ciszewski, 179 F. Supp. 2d at 1097-98.

For instance, when Ms. Fitch reported sexual harassment to one of CRST's managers, the manager then

4. CRST responded appropriately to Ms. Shadden's complaint of sexual harassment against Mr. Carl Bowling. Although there is no evidence CRST responded appropriately to her complaints about three other men, Ms. Shadden testified all three men were "one-timers pretty much" insofar as they all "hit on [her] once," she told them "no" and "they kind of g[o]t the picture." Def.'s App'x at 2602. The sexual harassment by each of these three men is not actionable because it was not severe or pervasive. See, e.g., Meriwether v. Caraustar Packaging Co., 326 F.3d 990, 993 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding that a single incident of grabbing a co-worker's buttock with force and later joking about it was not sufficiently severe or pervasive to support a sexual harassment claim).

sexually harassed Ms. Fitch. There is sufficient evidence from which a reasonable jury could find Ms. Binagaman complained about sexual harassment, CRST failed to address her complaint and, as a direct consequence, Ms. Binagaman was sexually assaulted. Further, a reasonable jury could find CRST failed to adequately respond to the sexual harassment complaints made by Mss. Bender, Deese and Hoffman, which resulted in further sexual harassment of them.

Accordingly, the court places no bar upon the EEOC's ability to seek relief on behalf of Mss. Bedford, Bender, Bingaman, Deese, Fisk, Fitch, Hoffman and O'Dell at trial.

D. The EEOC May Seek Partial Relief on Behalf of Eight Women at Trial

Fourth, the court places a partial bar on the EEOC's ability to seek relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Pamela Barlow, Peggy Blake, Donna Dickson, Nicole Edwards, Zelestine Grant, Martha Griffin, Carole Pettit and Rhonda Wellman ("the remaining eight women"). Although there is no evidence to show that CRST knew or should have known about the sexual harassment of the remaining eight women, the EEOC has presented the court with evidence from which a jury could find CRST's response to their complaints of sexual harassment left the eight remaining women worse off and thus does not qualify as "effective remedial action" for purposes of establishing a Title VII sexual harassment claim.[5]

5. The EEOC does not allege retaliation, and the court's discussion in the remainder of this section should not be construed

Appendix H

"The cases recognize that there are some actions an employer might take in response to a worker's complaint of harassment that will, irrespective of their success in bringing the harassment to a halt, subject the employer to liability." Hostetler v. Quality Dining, Inc., 218 F.3d 798, 811 (7th Cir. 2000). As Judge Posner has observed, in some circumstances merely separating the complainant from the harasser will cause the employer to incur liability under Title VII.

> A remedial measure that makes the victim of sexual harassment worse off is ineffective per se. A transfer that reduces the victim's wage or other remuneration, increases the disamenities of work, or impairs her prospects for promotion makes the victim worse off. Therefore such a transfer is an inadequate discharge of the employer's duty of correction.

Guess v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 913 F.2d 463, 465 (7th Cir. 1990) (Posner, J.) (emphasis added); see also Steiner v. Showboat Operating Co., 25 F.3d 1459, 1464 (9th Cir. 1994) ("[A] victim of sexual harassment should not have to work in a less desirable location as a result of the employer's remedial plan").

> Negligence of this nature exposes the employer not to liability for what occurred as a description of a retaliation claim. Hostetler v. Quality Dining, Inc., 218 F.3d 798, 811 n.9 (7th Cir. 2000). The issue is whether the EEOC may prove the eight remaining women suffered harm as a result of CRST's ineffective remedial actions.

> before the employer was put on notice of the harassment, but for the harm that the employer inflicted on the plaintiff as a result of its inappropriate response. Recall that in the usual case of coworker harassment, the employer becomes liable to the employee only when it knows or should know that wrongdoing is afoot and yet fails to take steps reasonably designed to stop it. See Guess, 913 F.2d at 465. In that scenario, the employer (provided it exercised due care in hiring the harasser) typically is held to account only for injuries that occur after the point at which it is on notice of the harassment—in other words, injuries that the employer could have prevented but did not. Where, however, the employer takes action that puts a stop to the harassment, but in a way that inappropriately forces the plaintiff to bear the costs, it is the plaintiff's loss in pay, her demotion, or the other "disamenities of work" for which she is entitled to compensation.

Hostetler, 218 F.3d at 811 (emphasis in original).

On the record presently before the court, a reasonable jury could conclude that CRST's response to the sexual harassment complaints of the eight remaining women left them worse off. For example, a reasonable jury could find CRST removed the women from the trucks they shared with their harassers, which left the women stranded in distant locations waiting without pay for new assignments or without provisions for food, shelter or transportation.[6] Although CRST may not be held liable for its employees' sexual harassment of the eight remaining women, it may be held liable for its responses to their complaints of sexual harassment insofar as CRST's responses left them worse off and are thus ineffective per se. Guess, 913 F.2d at 465.

Accordingly, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of Mss. Barlow, Blake, Dickson, Edwards, Grant, Griffin, Pettit and Wellman for any sexual harassment they suffered while working for CRST. However, the court shall permit the EEOC to seek relief on behalf of these eight remaining women to the extent that CRST's responses to their complaints left them worse off and are thus ineffective per se.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 146) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(1) The EEOC is BARRED from seeking relief at trial on behalf of fifteen women: Mss. Jeana Allen, Bonnie Batyick, Christine Bell-Boyer, Bethany Broeker, Kim Chisolm, Samantha Cunningham, Denise Desonier, Maybi Fernandez-Fabre, Delila Katzka, Ginger Laudermilk, Tina Lott, Vernona McIver, Faith Shadden, Rachel Tucker and Diana Vance.

6. Indeed, some women were left in worse positions than their alleged harassers, who continued to drive the trucks.

(2) The EEOC is PARTIALLY BARRED from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Pamela Barlow, Peggy Blake, Donna Dickson, Nicole Edwards, Zelestine Grant, Martha Griffin, Carole Pettit and Rhonda Wellman. The EEOC may not hold CRST to account for the sexual harassment these eight women suffered; CRST is only potentially liable for any losses these eight women suffered as a direct result of a negligent response to their sexual harassment complaints.

(3) The court declines to bar the EEOC from seeking full relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Belinda Bedford, Mary Bender, Lillie Bingaman, Darleaner Deese, Cynthia Fisk, Robryna Fitch, Pamela Hoffman and Bobbi O'Dell.

(4) The EEOC is ORDERED to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before June 22, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s "Motion for Summary Judgment Against the Claims of Certain of the Interveners" ("Motion") (docket no. 145).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS[1]

A. Ms. Starke's Charge

On December 1, 2005, Ms. Monika Starke presented a Charge of Discrimination ("Charge") to Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"). Ms. Starke alleged that her employer, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST"), "discriminated against [her] on the basis of . . . sex . . . , in violation of Title VII of the

---

1. The court assumes complete familiarity with the prior proceedings.

Civil Rights Act of 1964, [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.,] as amended" ("Title VII"). Def.'s App'x at 2998. Ms. Starke alleged the following "particulars" in her Charge:

> I was hired by [CRST] on June 22, 2005 in the position of Truck Driver. Since my employment began with [CRST,] I have been subjected to sexual harassment on two occasions by my Lead Trainers. On July 7, 2005, Bob Smith, Lead Trainer[,] began to make sexual remarks to me whenever he gave me instructions. . . . . On July 14, 2005, I contacted the dispatcher and was told that I could not get off the truck until the next day. On July 18, 2005 through August 3, 2005, David Goodman, Lead Trainer, forced me to have unwanted sex with him on several occasions while we were traveling in order to get a passing grade.

Id. Further, Ms. Starke alleged that CRST "did not state why I was subjected to sexual harassment[,] which created a hostile work environment." Id.

Ms. Starke asked the EEOC to file her Charge and cross-file it with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission ("ICRC"). Pursuant to a work-sharing agreement,[2] the EEOC received the Charge on behalf of both agencies and deemed the Charge to be "initially instituted" with the

2. For further explanation of the work-sharing agreement between the EEOC and the ICRC, see Millage v. City of Sioux City, 258 F. Supp. 2d 976, 985-86 (N.D. Iowa 2003) (Bennett, C.J.).

ICRC. (In the work-sharing agreement, the EEOC and ICRC reciprocally designated each other as agents for receiving charges of unlawful employment practices.) The EEOC sent a copy of the Charge to the ICRC, notified the ICRC that the Charge "is to be initially investigated by the EEOC," id. at 3000, and began its investigation. The ICRC had waived its right to exclusive jurisdiction over charges initially instituted with it. Here, the ICRC filed the Charge on December 5, 2005 but apparently stayed its own investigation pending resolution of the EEOC proceedings.

The Charge remained pending before the EEOC for nearly two years. During such time, Ms. Starke did not exercise her right to file a Title VII lawsuit against CRST. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) (permitting a charging party to file an individual Title VII lawsuit 180 days after her charge is filed); see, e.g., Occidental Life Ins. Co. of Cal. v. EEOC, 432 U.S. 355, 366, 97 S. Ct. 2447, 53 L. Ed. 2d 402 (1977) (explaining that § 2000e-5(f)(1) provides "[a]n aggrieved person unwilling to await the conclusion of extended EEOC proceedings [the right to] institute a private lawsuit 180 days after a charge has been filed").

B. The EEOC's Complaint

On September 27, 2007, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke "and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] . . . ." Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1. Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3) and 42 U.S.C. § 1981a, the EEOC brings suit in its own name "to correct [CRST's] unlawful employment practices on the basis of sex, and to provide appropriate relief to [Ms.] Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] who were adversely affected by such practices." First Amended Complaint (docket no. 8), at 1.[3] The EEOC generally alleges that Ms. Starke and the other similarly situated women ("aggrieved persons" in Title VII parlance[4]) "were adversely affected . . . when their lead drivers or team drivers subjected them to sexual harassment and to a sexually hostile working environment based on their gender, and CRST failed to prevent, correct, and protect them . . . ." Id. At present, the EEOC seeks monetary and equitable relief on behalf of 142 allegedly aggrieved persons. Notice (docket no. 237), at 1-5.

C. Answer

On November 30, 2007, CRST filed an Answer and Affirmative Defenses (docket no. 11). On May 1, 2008, CRST filed an Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses ("Amended Answer") (docket no. 36) to assert an additional affirmative defense. CRST denies the substance of the EEOC's Complaint and asserts seven affirmative defenses, including waiver or release, failure to exhaust administrative remedies and "untimel[iness]." Amended Answer at 2.

3. The First Amended Complaint, filed on November 16, 2007, corrected a typographical error in the Complaint. Ruling (docket no. 31), at 1 n.1.

4. Once again, the court refers to the "similarly situated female employees" who are referenced in the EEOC's Complaint as "allegedly aggrieved persons" and not as "class members." Order (docket no. 223), at 5-6.

D. First Intervener Complaint

On August 18, 2008, Ms. Starke and five other women, Mss. Janet Boot, Barbara Grant, Cindy Moffett, Remcey Jeunenne Peeples and Latesha Thomas, filed a Motion for Leave to Intervene ("First Motion to Intervene") (docket no. 43). They asked the court for permission to intervene in this lawsuit, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24 and 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-5(f)(1) and 2000e-7. Their proposed Complaint ("First Intervener Complaint") (docket no. 49) is substantially similar to the EEOC's Complaint except for three additions.

First, Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas each plead violations of the Iowa Civil Rights Act ("ICRA"), Iowa Code chapter 216 (2007), in addition to violations of Title VII. Second, they plead retaliation claims in addition to claims of sexual harassment, all in violation of Title VII and ICRA. See, e.g., First Intervener Complaint (docket no. 43-3), at 4 ("The retaliation including [sic] among other things, stranding the Plaintiffs/ Interveners, giving them unfavorable assignments, and terminating their employment, such that [CRST]'s conduct had a tendency to dissuaded [sic] a reasonable worker from making or supporting a charge of discrimination."). Third, Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas seek attorneys' fees from CRST.

On September 2, 2008, CRST filed a Resistance (docket no. 46) to the First Motion to Intervene. CRST argued the First Motion to Intervene was untimely because it was filed three months after the court's deadline for adding parties or amending the pleadings. In the alternative, CRST argued that the First Intervener Complaint failed to establish the rights of Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas to sue under ICRA. CRST noted the six women had not pled compliance with or exhaustion of ICRA's administrative requirements. CRST also questioned their standing to sue under ICRA, because apparently only Ms. Boot resides in Iowa.

On September 11, 2008, Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas filed a Reply (docket no. 47), to which they attached right-to-sue letters from the ICRC for Mss. Starke, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas (but not Ms. Boot). All five right-to-sue letters are undated. Each letter states without explanation that the woman under consideration had filed a timely charge with the ICRC. See Iowa Code § 216.15(12) ("Except as provided in [§] 614.8, a claim under this chapter shall not be maintained unless a complaint is filed with the commission within three hundred days after the alleged discriminatory or unfair practice occurred."). The right-to-sue letters for Mss. Starke and Peeples state they might file a civil action against CRST within 90 days of August 19, 2008. The right-to-sue letters for Mss. Grant, Moffett and Thomas state they might file a civil action against CRST within 90 days of September 11, 2008.

Appendix I

On September 26, 2008, United States Magistrate Judge Jon S. Scoles granted the First Motion to Intervene. Judge Scoles construed § 2000e-5(f)(1) to afford Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas the right to intervene in this action. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) ("The person or persons aggrieved shall have the right to intervene in a civil action brought by the [EEOC] . . . ."). Judge Scoles held the First Motion to Intervene was timely under Rule 24 even though Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas "did not offer a convincing reason for their delay in attempting to join this action . . . ." Order (docket no. 48), at 5.[5] Judge Scoles pointed out it was unclear from the record whether Mss. Starke, Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas had established their rights to sue under ICRA. Instead of denying the First Motion to Intervene on grounds of futility, however, Judge Scoles granted the Motion to Intervene and urged CRST to "file an appropriate motion in that regard." Id. at 7.

CRST did not appeal Judge Scoles's decision. Rather, on October 20, 2008, CRST filed an Answer (docket no. 50) to the First Intervener Complaint. CRST denied the substance of the First Intervener Complaint and asserted ten affirmative defenses, including the affirmative defenses it advanced in its Amended Answer.

5. Judge Scoles later noted that Ms. Starke's attorneys, who also represent Mss. Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas, "apparently [had] monitored the litigation from the outset." Order (docket no. 124), at 3 n.2.

Appendix I

E. Second Intervener Complaint

On November 26, 2008, Ms. Nicole Cinquemano filed a Motion for Leave to Intervene ("Second Motion to Intervene") (docket no. 76). Ms. Cinquemano's proposed Complaint ("Second Intervener Complaint") (docket no. 83) was nearly identical to the First Intervener Complaint. Ms. Cinquemano alleges sex discrimination and retaliation in violation of Title VII and ICRA. Specifically, Ms. Cinquemano alleges she "was subjected to . . . unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments from her lead driver" and was "threatened with losing her license, and ultimately losing her job, such that [CRST]'s conduct had a tendency to dissuade a reasonable worker from making or supporting a charge of discrimination." Second Intervener Complaint at 3. Ms. Cinquemano asserted the Second Motion to Intervene was timely "[b]ecause [CRST]'s unlawful employment practices continues [sic] until just a few months ago with respect to Ms. Cinquemano, and because a right to sue letter was just obtained . . . ." Brief in Support of Second Motion to Intervene (docket no. 76-2), at 1. Ms. Cinquemano pointed out she had been "an identified class member for some time, and allowing her to intervene [would] in no way unfairly prejudice [CRST]." Id. at 2.

On December 4, 2008, CRST filed a Resistance (docket no. 81) to the Second Motion to Intervene. CRST reasserted the arguments in its resistance to the First Motion to Intervene. Further, CRST pointed out Ms. Cinquemano filed the Second Motion to Intervene "just six weeks before the January 15, 2009 discovery cut-off date and without any justification for this last-minute attempt to intervene." Resistance (docket no. 81), at 1.

On December 8, 2008, Judge Scoles granted the Second Motion to Intervene "[f]or the reasons stated by the Court in its earlier [Order (docket no. 48)]." Order (docket no. 82), at 1. Again, CRST did not appeal Judge Scoles's decision to the undersigned. On January 9, 2009, CRST filed an Answer (docket no. 105) to the Second Intervener Complaint, in which it denies the substance of the Second Intervener Complaint and advances ten affirmative defenses, including the affirmative defenses it advances in its Amended Answer.

F. Amended Intervener Complaints

On May 22, 2009, Ms. Cinquemano filed an Amended Complaint (docket no. 240). On the same date, Mss. Boot, Grant, Moffett, Peeples and Thomas filed an Amended Complaint (docket no. 241). These amended pleadings reflect that, on May 14, 2009, the EEOC issued right-to-sue letters to Mss. Cinquemano, Grant, Moffett and Thomas (but not Ms. Boot or Ms. Starke).[6]

G. Motion

On February 13, 2009, CRST filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, Plaintiffs-Interveners Janet Boot, Barbara Grant, Cindy Moffett, Remcey Jeunenne

6. The EEOC issued the right-to-sue letters less than a month before trial is scheduled to commence. At present, the significance of the right-to-sue letters is unclear.

Peeples, Monika Starke, Latesha Thomas and Nicole Ann Cinquemano (collectively, "Plaintiffs-Interveners") filed a Resistance (docket no. 161). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket nos. 181 & 182). The EEOC did not respond to the Motion, even though it claims an attorney-client relationship with Plaintiffs-Interveners and intends to seek relief on their behalf at trial (to the extent that the court has not already barred it from doing so).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. See LR 7(c). The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

III. SUMMARY OF THE RELEVANT LAW

A. Unlawful Sex Discrimination--Sexual Harassment

Under Title VII and ICRA, it is generally unlawful for an employer to discriminate against a woman because of her sex. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1); Iowa Code § 216.6(1)(a). It is settled that sexual harassment in the form of a hostile work environment may constitute unlawful sex discrimination under either statute. See, e.g., Meritor Sav. Bank, FSB v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 64, 106 S. Ct. 2399, 91 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1986) (Title VII); Reed v. Cedar County, 474 F. Supp. 2d 1045, 1061 (N.D. Iowa 2007) (Title VII and ICRA).[7]

7. The court collapses the Title VII and ICRA analyses in the instant Order. See Van Horn v. Best Buy Stores, L.P., 526 F.3d 1144, 1147 (8th Cir. 2008) ("In most respects, Iowa courts have used the analytical framework used for Title VII claims, and have looked to federal law for guidance, in deciding cases under

To prove sex discrimination based upon a hostile work environment theory of sexual harassment, a plaintiff must prove "(1) the plaintiff belongs to a protected group; (2) the plaintiff was subject to unwelcome harassment; (3) a causal nexus exists between the harassment and the plaintiff's protected group status; and (4) the harassment affected a term, condition, or privilege of employment." Gordon v. Shafer Contracting Co., 469 F.3d 1191, 1194-95 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Al-Zubaidy v. TEK Indus., Inc., 406 F.3d 1030, 1038 (8th Cir. 2005)). In addition,

> if the harassment was committed by a co-worker, [a plaintiff] must . . . establish that [the employer] "knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action." Dhyne v. Meiners Thriftway, Inc., 184 F.3d 983, 987 (8th Cir. 1999). On the other hand, if the harassment was committed by an employee who supervised [the plaintiff], [the employer] is vicariously liable for the harassment unless it can establish the affirmative defense defined in Burlington Indus., Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 765, 118 S. Ct. 2257, 141 L. Ed. 2d 633 (1998), and Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 807-08, 118 S. Ct. 2275, 141 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1998).

the ICRA because the ICRA is modeled in part on Title VII."); see, e.g., Farmland Foods, Inc. v. Dbq. Human Rights Comm'n, 672 N.W.2d 733, 743-45 & n.2 (Iowa 2003) (adopting the Title VII framework for hostile work environment racial discrimination claims brought under ICRA). Although the Iowa Supreme Court repeatedly has indicated that the Title VII and ICRA analyses may diverge, see, e.g., McElroy v. State, 703 N.W.2d 385, 391 (Iowa 2005), neither party argues for divergent analyses in this case.

Joens v. John Morrell & Co., 354 F.3d 938, 940 (8th Cir. 2004). That is,

> [the employer] is vicariously liable for harassment by its supervisory personnel unless it can establish that (1) [it] exercised reasonable care to prevent and promptly correct any harassing behavior; and (2) [the plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of the preventive or corrective opportunities provided by [the employer]. [Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 765]. An employer may assert the affirmative defense only "[w]hen no tangible employment action is taken." [Faragher, 524 U.S. at 807-08].

Gordon, 469 F.3d at 1195.

To prove sexual harassment is sufficiently unwelcome to be actionable under Title VII or ICRA, a plaintiff must meet an objective standard and a subjective standard. With respect to the objective standard, "[c]onduct that is not severe or pervasive enough to create an objectively hostile or abusive work environment--an environment that a reasonable person would find hostile or abusive--is beyond Title VII's purview." Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 21, 114 S. Ct. 367, 126 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1993). "[W]hether an environment is sufficiently hostile or abusive must be judged by looking at all the circumstances," including the frequency, physicality and severity of the conduct. Clark County Sch. Dist. v. Breeden, 532 U.S. 268, 270-71, 121 S. Ct. 1508, 149 L. Ed. 2d 509 (2001) (per curiam) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). With respect to the subjective standard, it is settled that, "if the victim does not subjectively perceive the environment to be abusive, the conduct has not actually altered the conditions of the victim's employment, and there is no [sex discrimination]." Harris, 510 U.S. at 21-22.

It is important to remember that neither Title VII nor ICRA "mandate[s] an employment environment worthy of a Victorian salon." Hall v. Gus Constr. Co., 842 F.2d 1010, 1017 (8th Cir. 1988). "White gloves, crystal, and fine china are neither required nor expected." Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 139 F.R.D. 657, 662 (D. Minn. 1991). Title VII and ICRA were not designed to "displace all ribaldry on the roadway," and "[o]ne may well expect that . . . language of the barracks will always predominate over that of the ballroom." Hall, 842 F.2d at 1017-18.

B. Unlawful Retaliation

In addition to proscribing sexual harassment in the workplace, Title VII and ICRA prohibit retaliation against employees who allege--or participate in an investigation or proceeding alleging--a violation of Title VII or ICRA by their employers. Title VII makes it unlawful for an employer to discriminate against an employee for "oppos[ing] any practice made unlawful by [Title VII], or because he has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding or hearing under [Title VII]." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a). ICRA makes it illegal for an employer "to discriminate or retaliate against another person in any of the rights protected [under ICRA] because such person has lawfully opposed any practice forbidden under [ICRA], obeys [ICRA], or has filed a complaint, testified, or assisted in any proceeding under [ICRA]." Iowa Code § 216.11.

Absent direct evidence of retaliation, a plaintiff's claim is analyzed under the burden-shifting framework of McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 93 S. Ct. 1817, 36 L. Ed. 2d 668 (1973). Barker v. Mo. Dep't of Corr., 513 F.3d 831, 834 (8th Cir. 2008); see also Hite v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 446 F.3d 858, 865 (8th Cir. 2006) ("An employee can prove retaliation through circumstantial evidence using the McDonnell Douglas burden-shifting analysis." (Citations omitted.)). "Under this framework, the plaintiff has the initial burden of establishing a prima facie case of retaliation." Barker, 513 F.3d at 834 (citing Clark v. Johanns, 460 F.3d 1064, 1067 (8th Cir. 2006)). To establish a prima facie case of retaliation, the plaintiff must prove "(1) [she] engaged in a protected activity; (2) an adverse employment action was taken against [her]; and (3) a causal connection exists between the two." Id. (citing Thompson v. Bi-State Dev. Agency, 463 F.3d 821, 826 (8th Cir. 2006)). The plaintiff's burden at the prima facie case stage of the analysis is not onerous, and "[a] minimal evidentiary showing will satisfy this burden of production." Rodgers v. U.S. Bank, N.A., 417 F.3d 845, 850 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Pope v. ESA Servs., Inc., 406 F.3d 1001, 1007 (8th Cir. 2005)). "Once the plaintiff satisfies this burden, [the] defendant must offer a legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for the employment action." Barker, 513 F.3d at 834. "The burden of production then returns to the plaintiff to show that the employer's reason was a pretext for discrimination." Id.

"The ultimate burden of proof or persuasion to show that the employer's conduct was motivated by retaliatory intent remains at all times on the plaintiff." Wallace v. DTG Opers., Inc., 442 F.3d 1112, 1119 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 511, 113 S. Ct. 2742, 125 L. Ed. 2d 407 (1993)). "The ultimate question in any retaliation case is whether the employer's adverse action against the employee was motivated by retaliatory intent." Id. To establish a retaliation claim, a plaintiff need not succeed on an underlying harassment claim. Gilooly v. Mo. Dept. of Health & Senior Servs., 421 F.3d 734, 739 (8th Cir. 2005) (citing Montandon v. Farmland Indus., Inc., 116 F.3d 355, 359 (8th Cir. 1997)). "A plaintiff need not establish the conduct which she opposed was in fact discriminatory but rather must demonstrate a good faith, reasonable belief that the underlying challenged conduct violated the law." Buettner v. Arch Coal Sales Co., 216 F.3d 707, 714 (8th Cir. 2000).

C. Standard for Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394, 395 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). The nonmoving party must offer proof "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. "'Evidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment.'" Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., 447 F.3d 569, 578 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Mayer v. Nextel W. Corp., 318 F.3d 803, 809 (8th Cir. 2003)).

IV. THE MERITS OF THE CLAIMS OF THE PLAINTIFFS-INTERVENERS

CRST asks the court to dismiss the claims of Mss. Boot, Cinquemano, Grant, Peeples, Starke and Thomas. (CRST does not ask the court to dismiss Ms. Moffett's claims.) The court considers CRST's arguments with respect to each these six women, in turn.

Appendix I

A. Ms. Boot

1. Facts

Ms. Janet Boot f/k/a Mrs. Janet Nibeck-Peck resides in Iowa City, Iowa. She worked as a truck driver for CRST from April of 1997 to January of 1998. Ms. Boot has spina bifida and uses a urine collection system bag. The urine bag gets dirty and is not easy to remove.

Ms. Boot alleges one of her trainers, Mr. Gerald Holmes, sexually harassed her in May or June of 1997 while they were driving a CRST semi-truck in Nevada. According to Ms. Boot:

> I opened up the curtains one night to tell him that I had to go to the rest room, and I did not see his penis, but his hand was going up and down and there was white sperm that got all over the steering wheel. It was due to be my term to drive, but I wasn't going to drive, not with that all over the steering wheel.

Def.'s App'x at 464. Ms. Boot claims she "froze . . . just a few seconds," "closed the curtain" and returned to her bunk in the back of the semi-truck's cab. Id. This masturbation incident shocked Ms. Boot and caused her to start shaking.

When Ms. Boot and Mr. Holmes arrived at a fuel stop about two hours down the road from the masturbation incident, Ms. Boot called her dispatcher. Ms. Boot told her dispatcher: "I [can]not be on that truck anymore and I [am] getting off of it." Id. at 465. Ms. Boot did not tell her dispatcher or any other members of CRST management about the masturbation incident. Ms. Boot's dispatcher nonetheless honored Ms. Boot's request to leave the semi-truck, reserved a hotel room for Ms. Boot for the night and assigned Ms. Boot a new trainer in less than twenty-four hours. Ms. Boot later successfully completed her training with a different driver, and CRST eventually promoted her to co-driver status.

On January 16, 1998, CRST randomly tested Ms. Boot for narcotic drugs. Ms. Boot told CRST that she needed to take the test at the University of Iowa with a clean urine bag. CRST denied her request, and Ms. Boot tested positive for THC.[8] Ms. Boot later took a second test with a clean urine bag and tested negative for controlled substances.

On July 8, 1998, CRST terminated Ms. Boot's employment because she failed the first drug test. On September 11, 1998, Ms. Boot filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC and the Wisconsin Equal Rights Division. On November 23, 1998, the EEOC issued Ms. Boot a right-to-sue letter. However, it does not appear Ms. Boot filed a Title VII or state civil rights lawsuit against CRST.

8. THC, or tetrahydrocannabinols, is a Schedule I controlled substance and tends to show Ms. Boot smoked marijuana. See United States v. White Plume, 447 F.3d 1067, 1070 (8th Cir. 2006) (discussing 21 U.S.C. § 841 et seq.).

On January 21, 2000, Ms. Boot filed a lawsuit against CRST and others in the Iowa District Court in and for Linn County. She pressed several common law claims, including negligence, defamation and breach of fiduciary duty.

On December 14, 2001, Ms. Boot and CRST entered into a confidential settlement agreement. In exchange for $3,000, Ms. Boot agreed to dismiss her lawsuit and release CRST from "any and all other existing or potential claims between them involving her employment with CRST," id. at 3414, including but not limited to claims under Title VII and ICRA. On January 22, 2002, Ms. Boot dismissed her lawsuit.

2. Argument

CRST offers six independent reasons why the court should dismiss Ms. Boot from this lawsuit with prejudice. CRST points out that (1) Ms. Boot's Title VII claims are untimely, because she alleges she was sexually harassed in 1997; (2) Ms. Boot's ICRA claims are untimely, because she never filed a charge of discrimination with the ICRC; (3) all of Ms. Boot's claims are barred under the express terms of the 2001 settlement agreement; (4) Ms. Boot did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment, because the masturbation incident, while vulgar, was not directed at her or at her gender; (5) Ms. Boot never reported sexual harassment to anyone at CRST; and (6) there is no basis for any retaliation claim, because CRST fired Ms. Boot for failing a random drug test eight months after the alleged sexual harassment occurred.

Ms. Boot concedes her "individual federal and state claims are not timely and that the [s]ettlement [a]greement with CRST precludes her individual claims as well." Resistance (docket no. 161), at 28. She also concedes she "does not have a retaliation claim as such a claim is both untimely and covered by [the parties' settlement agreement.]" Id. at 42. Instead, Ms. Boot proffers a largely incoherent argument as to why the court should not dismiss her from this lawsuit. Without citing any legal authority, Ms. Boot contends she is "not precluded from receiving monetary relief as a class member being part of the EEOC's pattern and practice claim because CRST maintained a companywide pattern or practice of sexual discrimination that dated back to when [Ms. Boot] was retaliated against, and because the EEOC is not bound by the Settlement Agreement and Release." Id. at 28.

3. Analysis

Ms. Boot's claims are frivolous. As Ms. Boot concedes in her Resistance, her Title VII and ICRA claims are untimely or unexhausted and, in any event, barred under the terms of the settlement agreement. Even if the court were to assume that the settlement agreement does not estop the EEOC from seeking monetary relief on Ms. Boot's behalf in this action, the EEOC did not resist the Motion. In any event, the court has already held in prior orders that (1) CRST did not engage in a pattern or practice of sexual harassment, see Order (docket no. 197), passim, and (2) the EEOC is not immune from § 2000e-5's statute of limitations and thus may not seek relief for sexual harassment alleged to have occurred prior to February 4, 2005, i.e., more than 300 days prior to the filing of Ms. Starke's Charge on December 1, 2005, see Order (docket no. 223), passim. And even if these prior procedural rulings did not completely undercut Ms. Boot's argument, her sexual harassment claims would still fail on their merits. There is no evidence that Ms. Boot reported the masturbation incident to CRST before she was fired. See, e.g., Anda v. Wickes Furn. Co., 517 F.3d 526, 533-34 (8th Cir. 2008) (dismissing hostile work environment sexual harassment claim on a number of alternative bases, in part because "the record is void of any evidence that Anda reported the alleged incidents of sexual harassment . . . before she resigned"). Because Mr. Holmes was Ms. Boot's coworker and not her supervisor, see Order (docket no. 197), at 60-61,[9] at trial she would be required to prove

9. "'The burden of proof to show that [the harasser] was the plaintiff's supervisor lies with the plaintiff.'" Sicalides v. Pathmark Stores, Inc., No. Civ. A. 99-CV-3465, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8051, 2000 WL 760439, *7 n.6 (E.D. Pa. Jun. 12, 2000) (quoting Kent v. Henderson, 77 F. Supp. 2d 628, 633 (E.D. Pa. 1999)). Other courts have uniformly held that truck driver trainers are coworkers and not supervisors. See, e.g., Huffman v. New Prime, Inc., No. 01-CV-S-0DS-ECF, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26204, 2003 WL 24009006, *5 (W.D. Mo. Dec. 17, 2003) (adhering to prior ruling that "truck driver trainers were co-workers rather than supervisors"); Vernarsky v. Covenant Transp., Inc., No. 1:01-CV-305, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18330, 2003 WL 21212776, *5 (E.D. Tenn. Apr. 15, 2003) (holding trainers of new truck drivers were not supervisors for purposes of Title VII); see also Cheshewalla v. Rand & Son Constr. Co., 415 F.3d 847, 850-51 (8th Cir. 2005) (holding foreman was not supervisor for purposes of Title VII because it was undisputed the foreman could not hire, fire, promote or reassign the plaintiff; it was irrelevant that the that CRST "'knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action.'" Joens, 354 F.3d at 940 (quoting Dhyne, 184 F.3d at 987). She has failed to generate a genuine issue of material fact on this element of her sex discrimination claims. Ms. Boot's retaliation claims fail on their merits, because CRST clearly fired her for her positive drug test; there is no other reasonable explanation for CRST's adverse employment action. Simply put, a reasonable jury could not find pretext here.

Accordingly, the court shall dismiss Ms. Boot from this lawsuit with prejudice.

B. Ms. Cinquemano

1. Facts

Ms. Nicole Cinquemano worked for CRST as a contract driver from December of 2007 to April of 2008. Prior to her employment, CRST paid Ms. Cinquemano's tuition to the "Show Me the Road Truck Driving School" in Sikeston, Missouri. Def. App'x at 692. In exchange, Ms. Cinquemano promised to work for CRST for at least eight months.

At the outset of her employment with CRST, Ms. Cinquemano attended orientation in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The orientation included anti-sexual harassment training.

plaintiff's supervisor may have consulted with the foreman on such matters and the plaintiff may have believed the foreman was her supervisor).

Ms. Cinquemano read CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy and understood she should contact her fleet manager immediately in the event she was sexually harassed. She also signed a written pledge to follow the policy.

During her orientation, Ms. Cinquemano informed a member of CRST's Safety Department that someone had sexually abused her for three years when she was a child. Ms. Cinquemano told the member of the Safety Department that she had concerns about training under anyone other than her husband, Mr. Michael Cinquemano. (Mr. Cinquemano was one of CRST's fully trained co-drivers.). The member of the Safety Department told Ms. Cinquemano he would try to pair her with her husband.

At the conclusion of her orientation, however, CRST declined to allow Ms. Cinquemano to train under Mr. Cinquemano. Mr. Cinquemano had a poor driving record; he had "got[ten] stuck in the mud twice." Pl.'s App'x at 15. Ms. Cinquemano was agitated that CRST did not assign her to train under her husband, because the opportunity to work with her husband was "the reason why [she] actually joined CRST." Def.'s App'x at 669.

One of CRST's managers asked Ms. Cinquemano if there was anyone else with whom she would be comfortable driving. Ms. Cinquemano suggested Mr. Randy Moore, Mr. Cinquemano's former trainer. The two men had known each other for almost three years and had gotten along well.

Mr. Cinquemano approached Mr. Moore "man to man" and asked him to train his wife. Pl.'s App. at 15.

Mr. Cinquemano told Mr. Moore about Ms. Cinquemano's history of sexual abuse and asked Mr. Moore to take special care of Ms. Cinquemano. Mr. Moore swore to Mr. Cinquemano that he would take good care of his wife.

CRST assigned Mr. Moore to train Ms. Cinquemano, but Mr. Moore betrayed the Cinquemanos' trust. Ms. Cinquemano trained under Mr. Moore from December 16 through 19, 2007. They drove from Cedar Rapids to Salt Lake City, Utah, and then to Carlisle, Pennsylvania. At one point, Mr. Moore told Ms. Cinquemano: "Here comes another truck. Lift up your shirt and then show him your . . . boobs." Def.'s App'x at 663. Ms. Cinquemano refused. While they were driving in Ohio on the way from Utah to Pennsylvania, Mr. Moore asked Mr. Cinquemano to "go down on him . . . while [he] was driving." Id. at 663-64. Mr. Moore also "peeped on" Ms. Cinquemano and touched her inappropriately. Pl.'s App'x. at 145.[10] While they drove

10. In her charge of discrimination, filed four months before her deposition, Ms. Cinquemano swore that Mr. Moore peeped on her and touched her inappropriately. Ms. Cinquemano did not mention any peeping and touching in her subsequent deposition, however; to the contrary, Ms. Cinquemano repeatedly testified that the sexual harassment was limited to Mr. Moore's requests for her to expose her breasts and perform fellatio. Without citing any legal authority and notwithstanding its failure to cross-examine Ms. Cinquemano as to this discrepancy, CRST argues Ms. Cinquemano's charge is inadmissible in light of her subsequent deposition testimony. The court assumes without deciding that Ms. Cinquemano's statements in her charge are admissible. Compare Tippens v. Celotex Corp., 805 F.2d 949, 954 n.6 (11th Cir. 1986) (avoiding issue of whether to extend the sham affidavit rule to affidavits filed before depositions but remarking that "it is much together, Mr. Moore was constantly on his cell phone "talking . . . dirty stuff." Def.'s App'x at 664.

Mr. Moore tried to intimidate Ms. Cinquemano into keeping silent about his conduct. Mr. Moore told Ms. Cinquemano that he had a military background and "was trained on how to kill people." Pl.'s App'x at 33. Mr. Moore told Ms. Cinquemano that, if she reported him to CRST, he would know "how to get [her] back," id., and her "training license would be gone," id. at 145. Further, Mr. Moore said "he knew where to find [her], and by turning him in [Ms. Cinquemano] would be taking food out of his kid's mouth." Id. Against CRST regulations, Mr. Moore kept a knife on their semi-truck.

Mr. Moore also became verbally abusive toward Ms. Cinquemano. While descending "the Rocky Mountain [sic]" en route to Utah from Iowa, Ms. Cinquemano began "yelling" for Mr. Moore to come out of his bunk. Def.'s App'x at 680. The semi-truck's brakes were failing, and she was speeding out of control. Ms. Cinquemano begged less likely that an affidavit which precedes a weak deposition is filed as a transparent sham") and Couden v. Duffey, 533 F. Supp. 2d 490, 505 (D. Del. 2008) (declining to invoke sham affidavit doctrine where affidavit preceded deposition when the defendant failed to cross-examine the deponent about contradictions), with In re CitX Corp., Inc., 448 F.3d 672, 680 (3d Cir. 2006) (affirming district court's decision to exclude prior filed affidavit at summary judgement stage, because there is "no principle that cabins sham affidavits to a particular sequence") and Tippens v. Celotex Corp., 815 F.2d 66, 68-69 & n.2 (Hill, J., dissenting from denial of reh'g en banc) (similar).

Mr. Moore to help her. Mr. Moore responded: "Just drive the fuckin' truck. You know how to drive a fuckin' truck. Just drive it. Why can't I get some damn fuckin' sleep around here." Id. at 680-81.

Ms. Cinquemano did not complain about Mr. Moore's conduct to CRST while the two were driving together. She did not get off the truck on account of any sexual harassment. Rather, on December 19, 2007, Mr. Moore dropped Ms. Cinquemano off at the Rodeway Inn in Carlisle, Pennsylvania as previously scheduled.[11] On December 22, 2007, Ms. Cinquemano's husband joined her in Carlisle and stayed about a week at the Rodeway Inn.

Mr. Cinquemano persuaded his wife to complain to CRST about the sexual harassment. On December 27, 2007, Ms. Cinquemano made a report of sexual harassment to CRST's Human Resources Department. A member of the Human Resources Department asked Ms. Cinquemano to provide a detailed account of the sexual harassment. On January 2, 2008, Ms. Cinquemano sent a facsimile detailing the harassment to CRST from the Rodeway Inn.

CRST later interviewed Mr. Moore about Ms. Cinquemano's allegations. Mr. Moore suggested that Ms. Cinquemano fabricated her allegations because the Cinquemanos owed him $ 600 and wanted to avoid 11. Mr. Moore had decided to spend some time at his home. He went out of his way to drop Ms. Cinquemano off in Carlisle so she might avoid having to take a bus from some other location to Carlisle.

repaying their debts to him. He denied swearing at her. Despite Ms. Cinquemano's repeated attempts, CRST broke its promises and never got back to Ms. Cinquemano about the status of its investigation.

Ms. Cinqemano resumed training with CRST in mid-January of 2008. Ms. Cinquemano completed her training with with Mr. Jerry Cummings. Her training with Mr. Cummings was "[f]antastic" and lasted through January of 2008. Id. at 672. She began driving with her husband in February of 2008.

All was not well, however, during this time frame. Immediately after she reported her claim of sexual harassment, CRST lowered Ms. Cinquemano's mileage to a "[v]ery low" level. Id. at 676. And on February 29, 2008, Cinquemano slipped and injured herself while exiting her truck. The Cinquemanos stayed together in Cedar Rapids for the month March as she recuperated from her injuries, received treatment and performed light duty work in Cedar Rapids.

When Ms. Cinquemano resumed driving with her husband, her dispatcher ordered her to unload a fifty-foot long trailer full of evergreen trees all by herself. The evergreen trees were all taller than Mr. Cinquemano, who is 6' 4" tall. The dispatcher specifically instructed Mr. Cinquemano not to help his wife. It took Ms. Cinquemano a long time to unload all of the trees, and CRST later faulted Ms. Cinquemano for the delay. Ms. Cinquemano complained about her dispatcher to one of CRST's managers, Mr. Jim Chapman. Mr. Chapman told

Ms. Cinquemano he would see if he could transfer her to another dispatcher.

Soon thereafter, on April 15, 2008, CRST fired Ms. Cinquemano. Mr. Chapman explained to Ms. Cinquemano that it was a business decision and not a performance issue. CRST's business was slowing, and there was little freight moving in its system.

In the instant litigation, CRST now cites poor performance as one of the reasons why it fired Ms. Cinquemano. Ms. Cinquemano admits her miles were very low, but believes CRST is using her miles as an excuse to hide its desire to punish her for complaining about sexual harassment.

2. Arguments

CRST argues Ms. Cinquemano's sexual harassment claims under Title VII and ICRA fail for two independent reasons: (1) she did not suffer severe and pervasive sexual harassment and (2) she failed to report any sexual harassment to CRST in a timely manner. CRST also claims Ms. Cinquemano "has no basis whatsoever for a retaliation claim." Brief in Support of Motion (docket no. 145-2), at 11. CRST argues there is "no evidence" in the record to show a causal connection between Ms. Cinquemano's complaint of sexual harassment against Moore and her firing. Reply (docket no. 181), at 16. CRST points out she was terminated months after making her sexual harassment complaint. CRST maintains it fired Ms. Cinquemano because of slow business and poor performance.

Ms. Cinquemano resists the Motion in its entirety. Ms. Cinquemano argues she was subjected to severe and pervasive sexual harassment. She states: "[I]t must be remembered that [she] worked in an environment in which woman [sic] are routinely subject to indecent exposure, masturbation, unwanted propositions, pornography and sexual assaults" and that she "lived, worked and slept with her harasser in a small secluded space virtually twenty-four hours a day." Resistance (docket no. 161), at 33. Ms. Cinquemano does not specifically address CRST's argument that she failed to report her sexual harassment in a timely manner. In other words, Ms. Cinquemano appears to concede that, if Mr. Moore was not her supervisor, CRST may not be held strictly liable for his conduct. Ms. Cinquemano states a reasonable jury could find that she was fired for making a complaint of sexual harassment as opposed to slow business or, as CRST now alleges, poor performance. Not only do CRST's shifting explanations for her firing give rise to an inference of retaliation, but a reasonable jury could find the reduction in miles on the heels of her complaint is damning.

3. Analysis

a. Sexual harassment claims

The court holds Ms. Cinquemano failed to present sufficient evidence to prove her sexual harassment claims. The court assumes without deciding that Ms. Cinquemano suffered severe and pervasive sexual harassment. Because Mr. Moore was Ms. Cinquemano's coworker and not her supervisor, Order (docket no. 197), at 60-61, she is required to prove that CRST "'knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action.'" Joens, 354 F.3d at 940. She has failed to generate a genuine issue of material fact on this element of her sexual harassment claims. CRST did not know about Mr. Moore's conduct until after it ended. By failing to report Mr. Moore's actions promptly, Ms. Cinquemano did not provide CRST with an opportunity to take proper remedial action. Cf. Cheshewalla v. Rand & Son Constr. Co., 415 F.3d 847, 851 (8th Cir. 2005) (affirming dismissal of retaliation claim, where the plaintiff "did not report any harassment occurring after . . . [her supervisor] was first alerted that it was in fact [the plaintiff] who was being harassed").

Accordingly, the court shall dismiss Ms. Cinquemano's Title VII and ICRA sexual harassment claims.

b. Retailation claims

The court holds Ms. Cinquemano has presented sufficient evidence to survive summary judgment as to her retaliation claims. There is sufficient evidence of a causal connection between Ms. Cinquemano's protected activity in January of 2008 and her termination in April of 2008.

> Although the temporal proximity between the protected activity and the alleged retaliatory act must generally be 'very close,' the 'employee may attempt to shorten the gap between [the] protected activity and the adverse action by showing that shortly after [the employee] engaged in the protected activity, the employer took escalating adverse and retaliatory action against [the employee].'

Heaton v. Weitz Co., 534 F.3d 882, 888 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting Hite, 446 F.3d at 866). Here, the approximately four month gap between the protected activity and the adverse employment action weighs against an inference of retaliation. See Hesse, 394 F.3d at 633 ("A gap in time between the protected activity and the adverse employment action weakens an inference of retaliatory motive."); see also Heaton, 534 F.3d at 888 (intimating that a six month gap in time weighted against an inference of retaliatory motive or was, at the very least, insufficient in itself to establish causation). At the very least, the gap is--in itself--insufficient evidence of retaliation to survive summary judgement. See Clark County, 532 U.S. at 273-74 (citing cases holding that three-month and four-month intervals between the protected activity and the adverse employment action were insufficient to establish the requisite causal nexus) (citations omitted); Kipp, 280 F.3d at 897 (determining that a two-month interval was, by itself, insufficient to establish a causal nexus). However, as in Heaton, "all was not well during this . . . period." 534 F.3d at 888. Immediately following her complaint of sexual harassment, CRST reduced Ms. Cinquemano's hours. One of her dispatchers made her perform the difficult, if not impossible, task of unloading a fifty-foot long trailer full of evergreen trees by herself; CRST later faulted Ms. Cinquemano for failing to unload the evergreen trees in a timely manner. Finally, CRST has offered shifting reasons for her termination over time. See, e.g., EEOC v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 477 F.3d 561, 571 (8th Cir. 2007) ("[S]hifting reasons support a finding of illegal motivation."); Young v. Warner-Jenkinson Co., 152 F.3d 1018, 1023 (8th Cir. 1998) (shifting reasons for termination tend to show proferred reason was pretext for discrimination). Notably, CRST did not present the court with any evidence to document its allegation that Ms. Cinquemano was a poor performer.

In sum, a reasonable jury could find freight was slow and Ms. Cinquemano was a poor performer or a reasonably jury could find CRST fired Ms. Cinquemano because she made a sexual harassment complaint. Under such circumstances, summary judgment is not appropriate. Accordingly, the court shall not dismiss Ms. Cinquemano's Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims.

C. Ms. Grant

Ms. Barbara Grant, a resident of South Carolina, worked as a contract driver for CRST from June to September of 2007. She alleges that one of her trainers, Mr. Jackson Hamp, sexually harassed her from June 17, 2007 to June 27, 2007.

With respect to Ms. Grant's sexual harassment claims, CRST does not dispute that Mr. Hamp subjected Ms. Grant to severe and pervasive sexual harassment. Rather, CRST contends Ms. Grant never reported the sexual harassment to her dispatcher. Although Ms. Grant's deposition testimony is not a model of clarity, the court finds that a reasonable jury could find that Ms. Grant repeatedly complained about Mr. Hamp's severe and pervasive conduct to her dispatcher and her dispatcher ignored her. See, e.g., Def.'s App'x at 1193 ("I picked up the phone and called Lisa, [who] was my fleet manager, and I told her what was going on . . . ."); Pl.'s App'x at 54 ("Like I said, at some point I had to tell Lisa. I don't know what day it was, but she knew what was happening, and she never done [sic] anything about it until the day that he started to pull me off in New Mexico . . . . There is no way I could have taken a whole week with [Mr. Hamp] and not told dispatch at some point what was going on.").

With respect to Ms. Grant's retaliation claims, CRST argues that there is insufficient evidence to establish a causal connection between Ms. Grant's alleged complaints about Mr. Hamp to CRST and any adverse employment action. The court agrees. The circumstances surrounding Ms. Grant's departure from CRST are wholly unclear from the record; it is unclear whether Ms. Grant abandoned her position or CRST terminated Ms. Grant for abandoning her truck after she refused to drive with her final team driver, Mr. William Hawthorne. Even if the court assumes CRST fired Ms. Grant, there was a two-and-one-half month gap between her last complaint of sexual harassment and her termination. Standing alone, this gap in time is too great to establish a causal connection between any protected activity and CRST's adverse employment action. Kipp, 280 F.3d at 897. Further, there is no evidence CRST took escalating adverse and retaliatory action against Ms. Grant during the two-and-one-half month period. Cf. Heaton, 534 F.3d at 888. Nor has CRST offered shifting reasons for Ms. Grant's termination. Cf. Wal-Mart Stores, 477 F.3d at 571.

Accordingly, the court shall not dismiss Ms. Grant's Title VII and ICRA sexual harassment claims. The court shall dismiss Ms. Grant's Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims.

D. Ms. Peeples

1. Facts

Ms. Remcey Jeunenne Peeples a/k/a Jeunenne Peeples a/k/a Jeunenne Lassiter a/k/a Jeunenne Wyatt a/k/a Jeunenne Chaney, a life-long resident of Texas, worked for CRST as a contract driver from August 4, 2005 to September 20, 2005. She alleges her second trainer, Mr. Robert Stanley, sexually harassed her over a three-day period from August 15, 2005 to August 18, 2005. Among other things, Mr. Stanley told Ms. Peeples "he wanted to Velcro [her] hands and [her] feet together," Pl.'s App'x at 67, engaged in unwanted touching of Ms. Peeples' person, told her she "need[ed] to have sex" with him, Def.'s Ex. at 2136, "pointed at his penis and said, 'Don't you want some of this?,'" id., touched her leg, jumped on her bunk while she was in it, made other sexually charged comments and repeatedly propositioned her for sex. He told her his marriage was failing and she "could become his new woman." Id. at 2169. The comments escalated over time. At one point, Mr. Stanley told Mr. Peeples: "You know you're going to have to have sex with me to pass this training course." Id. at 2137.

Tired and fed up with the sexual harassment, Ms. Peeples left Mr. Stanley's truck at a fuel stop in Arizona on August 18, 2008, at 1:30 a.m. She also called the police and one of CRST's managers. She told the manager about the sexual harassment.

The manager refused to help Ms. Peeples. Fortunately, a CRST driver who happened to be at the fuel stop offered to drive Ms. Peeples to CRST's nearest terminal in California. The manager agreed to let Ms. Peeples ride with the driver to California, where she might find another trainer.

One of CRST's managers eventually referred Ms. Peeples to CRST's Human Resources Department. Ms. Peeples talked about her sexual harassment with human resources personnel and faxed a complaint. Ms. Peeples' fax contained many obvious errors; numerous dates were clearly incorrect. CRST's Human Resources Department accused Ms. Peeples of lying about the sexual harassment. Around the same time, Ms. Peeples requested a specific new trainer. CRST agreed and assigned Ms. Peeples and her new trainer a load within a few days.

While waiting in California for the load, Ms. Peeples went to a doctor for vaginal bleeding. The doctor diagnosed the bleeding as menopause. Ms. Peeples drove for CRST for approximately one more month.[12] Her vaginal bleeding persisted. On September 20, 2005, Ms. Peeples went to a doctor in Texas for a second opinion. The doctor diagnosed 12. At some point in time, Ms. Peeples jack-knifed her truck and, on another occasion, ran her truck into a ditch. She received a failing grade for her lack of skill in driving the truck.

Ms. Peeples with cervical cancer. He ordered her to stop driving for CRST lest she risk bleeding to death from all of the truck's vibrations.

Ms. Peeples subsequently underwent radiation and chemotherapy to treat her cervical cancer. Due to the treatments, she has been continuously unable to return to work despite her desire to do so.

2. Analysis

Ms. Peeples's Title VII and ICRA sexual harassment claims fail as a matter of law. Assuming without deciding that Ms. Peeples suffered severe and pervasive sexual harassment at the hands of Mr. Stanley,[13] the court must dismiss her sexual harassment claims because she did not report the sexual harassment to CRST in a timely manner. It is undisputed that CRST did not know of Mr. Stanley's conduct towards Ms. Peeples until after it ended; she did not make a complaint of sexual harassment until after she stopped driving with him. By failing to report Mr. Stanley's actions in a timely manner, Ms. Peeples did not provide CRST with an opportunity to take proper remedial action. Cf. Cheshewalla, 415 F.3d 847 at 851.

Ms. Peeples's Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims also fail as a matter of law. A reasonable jury could not find a causal connection between Ms. Peeples's complaint

13. Once again, the court may assume without deciding that certain sworn allegations in a charge of discrimination that contradict subsequent deposition testimony are admissible.

about Mr. Stanley's conduct and any adverse employment action. CRST fired Ms. Peeples because she was diagnosed with cervical cancer, not because she made a complaint of sexual harassment. While CRST fired Ms. Peeples only a month or so after she complained about sexual harassment, it is undisputed that CRST found her a new trainer and a load and continued to employ her without incident until she informed CRST she was physically unable to drive a truck. Indeed, it is undisputed that Ms. Peeples' was physically unable to drive a semi-truck due to her cervical cancer and subsequent chemotherapy and radiation. Ms. Peeples offers only speculation in support of her retaliation claim, and speculation is insufficient to withstand summary judgment. Reasonover, 447 F.3d at 578.

Accordingly, the court shall dismiss Ms. Peeples from this case with prejudice.

E. Ms. Starke

On May 13, 2009, the court dismissed Ms. Starke from this lawsuit with prejudice. Accordingly, the court need not reach CRST's arguments in the Motion for dismissal of Ms. Starke's sexual harassment and retaliation claims. Accordingly, the court shall deny this portion of the Motion.

Appendix I

F. Ms. Thomas

1. Facts

Ms. Latesha Thomas, a resident of Florida, worked for CRST from November 13, 2006, to December 14, 2006. She drove with two trainers, Messrs. Brian Taft and Donald Brown. Mr. Taft did not sexually harass Ms. Thomas.

Ms. Thomas trained under Mr. Brown from late November of 2006 to mid-December of 2006. Her experience was "hell." Def.'s App'x at 3095. As soon as Ms. Thomas boarded Mr. Brown's truck, Mr. Brown informed Ms. Thomas that they would have to sleep in the same bunk because the top bunk was broken. When Ms. Thomas threatened to call their dispatcher, Mr. Brown suddenly found a way to fix the top bunk.

Mr. Brown made sexual comments to Ms. Thomas. For example, when Ms. Thomas left the truck he would say: "[W]ould you like some fries with that shake[?]" Def.'s App'x at 3095. Mr. Brown also propositioned Ms. Thomas for sex. Mr. Brown, who is African-American, would hold his crotch and "say[] that he haven't [sic] been with a black woman in so many years, he wanted to know how it would feel to be with a black woman, . . . he wouldn't mind sleeping with [her] . . . ." Id. at 3095-96.

On their third day of driving together, Mr. Brown began sleeping in the truck in the nude. Mr. Brown repeatedly told Ms. Thomas he was nude, and she could see him taking off his clothes. On one occasion, Mr. Brown put his hand on Ms. Thomas's bed and told her he wanted to have sex with her. He also tried to touch her in an inappropriate way.

Ms. Thomas called her dispatcher and told her about all of Mr. Brown's antics. The dispatcher told Ms. Thomas that CRST "would get with [Mr.] Brown and see what's going on." Id. at 3097.

The harassment continued unabated. Mr. Brown rubbed Ms. Thomas's leg and told her he would take care of her financially and sexually. Mr. Brown continued to tell Ms. Thomas that he wanted to have sex with her and that he "he wanted to make sure [she] was satisfied because [she] hadn't been with a man . . . ." Id. at 3101.

> After he would argue with his girlfriend, he would say he needs to get his nut off, and when I was ready for him, he's down in the bunk, let him know when I'm ready for him. He would grab. . . between his legs and told me he was ready. It even happened in Georgia when the truck was broke down . . . during that time frame he [said:] "Well, we could have sex to pass time by till someone comes and put gas in the truck . . . ."

Id. at 3098. Mr. Brown also offered Ms. Thomas $ 800 to have sex with him. "He said that since I won't give it to him freely he'd offer me $ 800 because he kn[e]w I need[ed] the money[.]" Id. at 3101.

Mr. Brown became angry after Ms. Thomas repeatedly refused his sexual advances. He yelled and swore at her. He criticized her driving performance and, on one occasion, left her in the truck alone on a cold and wet night without any heat.

Ms. Thomas contacted her dispatcher a second time and told the dispatcher about Mr. Brown's continuing sexual harassment. She told her dispatcher she did not appreciate Mr. Brown's sexual advances. Again, the dispatcher ignored her complaints. He only wanted to ensure timely delivery of freight. Nothing changed.

Ms. Thomas pleaded with Mr. Brown to leave her alone. Ms. Thomas told Mr. Brown she could not endure the sexual harassment and, as a consequence, refused to drive his truck. Mr. Brown told Ms. Thomas to "get the hell off my damn truck, and I'll put your ass out." Id. at 3102. The truck was in the middle of nowhere in Georgia, several hours from Ms. Thomas's home in Florida. Ms. Thomas got off the truck and never drove for CRST again.

2. Analysis

CRST argues that Ms. Thomas did not suffer severe and pervasive sexual harassment and, in any event, she failed to report any sexual harassment to CRST. CRST's arguments are not well taken. From the foregoing facts, a reasonable jury could find Thomas suffered severe and pervasive sexual harassment. Mr. Brown's sexually charged actions were frequent, severe, humiliating and unreasonably interfered with Ms. Thomas's work performance. See Clark County, 532 U.S. 268 at 270-71, 121 S. Ct. 1508, 149 L. Ed. 2d 509 (requiring the court to consider the totality of the circumstances). This is not a case of "simple teasing, offhand comments, and isolated incidents." Faragher, 524 U.S. at 788. Further, a reasonable jury could find that CRST management knew about the sexual harassment and did nothing to stop it. Although Ms. Thomas's deposition testimony is not a model of clarity, when read in the light most favorable to her, a reasonable jury could find she informed CRST about Mr. Brown's actions in a timely manner. Summary judgment is, therefore, inappropriate. See, e.g., Jenkins v. Winter, 540 F.3d 742, 750 (8th Cir. 2008) (reversing grant of summary judgment to employer for coworker harassment "[a]lthough the affidavits do not provide specific dates")

Ms. Thomas concedes she does not have viable retaliation claims under Title VII or ICRA against CRST. Ms. Thomas asserts she wishes to pursue "constructive discharge claims" under Title VII and ICRA in lieu of the retaliation claims she pled. "An employee is constructively discharged when he or she involuntarily resigns to escape intolerable and illegal employment requirements." Barrett v. Omaha Nat'l Bank, 726 F.2d 424, 428 (8th Cir. 1984). However, "'[a]n employee who quits without giving her employer a reasonable chance to work out a problem is not constructively discharged.'" Tenkku v. Normandy Bank, 348 F.3d 737, 742 (8th Cir. 2003) (quoting West v. Marion Merrell Dow, Inc., 54 F.3d 493, 497 (8th Cir. 1995)). The court expresses no view as to the merits of Ms. Thomas's proposed constructive discharge claims in the absence of complete briefing. It is unclear whether Ms. Thomas's proposed constructive discharge claims are properly before the court.

Accordingly, the court declines to dismiss Ms. Thomas's Title VII and ICRA sexual harassment claims. The court dismisses Ms. Thomas's Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims with prejudice.

V. NON-EXTRATERRITORIALITY OF ICRA

A. Arguments

In the alternative, CRST argues the court must dismiss all of the ICRA claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas[14] because they are not residents of Iowa and their claims arose outside of Iowa. In other words, CRST argues ICRA does not apply extraterritorially. CRST points out that neither Ms. Grant nor Ms. Thomas alleges she was sexually harassed within the borders of the State of Iowa; indeed, there is no evidence either woman drove through Iowa. Ms. Grant, a resident of South Carolina, alleges she was sexually harassed in Alabama, Arizona and New Mexico. Ms. Thomas, a resident of Florida, alleges she was sexually harassed in Illinois, Georgia and Oklahoma. CRST maintains the court must construe ICRA to apply only to conduct occurring within its own borders to avoid difficult questions of constitutional law, including "substantial constitutional questions under the 14. CRST also makes its extraterritoriality argument with respect to Mss. Peeples and Starke. Because the court has already dismissed Mss. Peeples and Starke from this lawsuit, the court need not consider this portion of CRST's alternative argument.

Commerce Clause, Full Faith and Credit Clause, and the Due Process Clause." Reply (docket no. 181), at 22 (citing Campbell v. Arco Marine, Inc., 42 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 626, 631-32 (Ct. App. 1996)). CRST claims the mere fact it maintains its headquarters in Iowa is an insufficient basis for Mss. Grant and Thomas to assert ICRA claims.

Mss. Grant and Thomas argue that ICRA applies extraterritorially. They do not dispute CRST's characterizations of their residences or the states in which they were sexually harassed. Rather, they point out that the statutory language of ICRA contains no apparent restriction on its extraterritorial application. Further, Mss. Grant and Thomas point out that the ICRC apparently believed it had jurisdiction over their charges when it issued their right to sue letters, and "[t]hese determinations by the [ICRC] deserve deference." Resistance (docket no. 161), at 50. Finally, Mss. Grant and Thomas query:

> It is unusual for an Iowa company to be complaining about being required to answer to an Iowa law. If Iowa was not appropriate, in what state, or states should the claims have been filed? Should [Ms. Grant] have brought her claim in South Carolina, even though there is no evidence that CRST is linked to that state? Was she required to have filed separate claims in Alabama, Arizona, and New Mexico where the harassment occurred[?] That seems incredibly inefficient and could lead to > inconsistent results. Plus, what happened in one state, or a combination of states[,] may not have individually been severe or pervasive, although what happened in all states might have been. Dividing these claims up does not seem to make sense. We agree that a line had to be drawn somewhere. The line was drawn by the Iowa [General Assembly]. In fact[,] where the [General Assembly] drew the line makes sense and is in no way unfair to CRST. Isn't it easier for them to defend their claim in an Iowa Court applying Iowa law? It also should be remembered that the fact that the headquarters happen[s] to be located in Cedar Rapids is not the only connection that these cases have to Iowa. [CRST's Human Resources Department ("HR")] is located in Cedar Rapids. Numerous policies, actions, inactions and employment decisions by HR, including the retaliatory discharges, that impact these cases were made in Cedar Rapids. Some of the dispatchers, whose actions, or inactions, are a part of this lawsuit, were located in Cedar Rapids.

Id.

B. Analysis

ICRA does not explicitly speak to the issue presently before the court. Nothing within the text of ICRA indicates whether the Iowa General Assembly intended for ICRA to apply beyond the borders of the State of Iowa.

Further, the Iowa Supreme Court has not yet decided whether ICRA operates extraterritorially. Whether ICRA extends beyond the borders of the State of Iowa is a matter of first impression.

At first blush, it would appear ICRA might apply extraterritorially. ICRA contains broad terms. It purports to apply to all employers, that is, "every . . . person employing employees within the state." Iowa Code § 216.2(7). ICRA defines "employee" recursively as "any person employed by an employer." Id. § 216.2(6). CRST has its headquarters at Cedar Rapids, Iowa and employs persons there, and Ms. Grant and Thomas worked for CRST.

Nonetheless, the court may not read ICRA in a vacuum but must construe its plain language against the backdrop of the non-extraterritoriality principle of statutory construction. It is settled that the Supreme Court of the United States and the Iowa Supreme Court each ordinarily presume that a statute does not apply extraterritorially absent an affirmative indication to the contrary within such statute. See, e.g., EEOC v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 248, 111 S. Ct. 1227, 113 L. Ed. 2d 274 (1991) (holding former version of Title VII did not apply extraterritorially), superseded by statute as recognized in Arbaugh v. Y & H Corp., 546 U.S. 500, 513, 126 S. Ct. 1235, 163 L. Ed. 2d 1097 (2006); Powell v. Khodari-Intergreen Co., 334 N.W.2d 127, 131 (Iowa 1983) ("It is a generally recognized principle that a statute of one state has no extraterritorial effect beyond its borders."); State Surety Co. v. Lensing, 249 N.W.2d 608, 611 (Iowa 1977) (holding surety bond issued under Iowa Code § 322.4(7) (1971) did not protect a non-resident who purchased a car outside of the State of Iowa from an Iowa dealer); Beach v. Youngblood, 215 Iowa 979, 247 N.W. 545, 550 (Iowa 1933) (holding district court erred in ordering foreclosure of certain real property located in Minnesota).

Lensing is instructive and sheds light on how the Iowa Supreme Court would likely construe ICRA. In Lensing, the Iowa Supreme Court held a surety bond given by an Iowa-licensed automotive dealer pursuant to the provisions of Iowa Code § 322.4(7) (1971) did not protect a non-resident buyer who purchased a car from the dealer outside the borders of the State of Iowa. 249 N.W.2d at 611. The Iowa Supreme Court reasoned:

> Unless the intention to have a statute operate beyond the limits of the state or country is clearly expressed or indicated by its language, purpose, subject matter, or history, no legislation is presumed to be intended to operate outside the territorial jurisdiction of the state or country enacting it. To the contrary, the presumption is that the statute is intended to have no extraterritorial effect, but to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the state or country enacting it. Thus, an extraterritorial effect is not to be given statutes by implication. Accordingly, a statute is prima facie operative only as to persons or things within the territorial jurisdiction of the lawmaking power which enacted it. These rules apply to a statute > using general words, such as 'any' or 'all,' in describing the persons or acts to which the statute applies. They are also applicable where the statute would be declared invalid if given an interpretation resulting in its extraterritorial operation.

Id.(citing 73 Am. Jur. 2d Statutes § 395); see also Arabian Am. Oil, 499 U.S. at 248 (requiring that "the affirmative intention of the Congress [be] clearly expressed" to overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality); Judkins v. St. Joseph's Coll. of Me., 483 F. Supp. 2d 60, 65 (D. Me. 2007) ("Clear and explicit language is necessary to overcome the presumption against extraterritorial application of a statute.").

In light of the foregoing, the court holds that ICRA does not apply extraterritorially notwithstanding its facially broad language. Nothing in the language, purpose, subject matter or history of ICRA clearly expresses or indicates that the Iowa General Assembly intended ICRA to operate beyond the borders of the State of Iowa. ICRA's "boilerplate language" is not a sufficiently clear expression of legislative intent to overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality. See, e.g., Arabian Am. Oil, 499 U.S. at 251 (holding "boilerplate language" insufficient to overcome the presumption against extraterritoriality); Union Underwear Co. v. Barnhart, 50 S.W.3d 188, 191 (Ky. 2001) (holding facially broad language, including the use of "any" and "all," to be insufficient to extend the Kentucky Human Rights Act extraterritorially). When the Iowa General Assembly intends that a statute operate extraterritorially, it explicitly says so. See, e.g., Iowa Code § 85.71 (2009) (expressly extending Iowa's workers' compensation statute outside of the borders of the State of Iowa). The court predicts the Iowa Supreme Court would "ma[k]e a policy decision, based on a combination of interstate comity and a desire to avoid choice-of-law difficulties, not to apply [ICRA] to employment situations that might arguably create a conflict with the laws of other states." Ferrer v. Medastat USA, LLC, 145 F. App'x 116, 120 (6th Cir. 2005). Conflicts are not hard to imagine, because ICRA prohibits more forms of discrimination than the civil rights laws of various other states. See, e.g., Iowa Code § 216.6 (outlawing discrimination on the basis of "sexual orientation" and "gender identity"). Imposing the Iowa General Assembly's "policy choice on the employment practices of [its] sister states should be done with great prudence and caution out of respect for the sovereignty of other states, and to avoid running afoul of the Commerce Clause of the United States Constitution." Ferrer, 145 F. App'x at 120 (quoting Union Underwear, 50 S.W.3d at 193. The court's conclusion that ICRA does not apply extraterritorially is consistent with the overwhelming majority of courts to consider the extraterritoriality vel non of other jurisdictions' civil rights statutes. See, e.g., Arabian Am. Oil, 499 U.S. at 248 (holding former version of Title VII did not apply extraterritorially); Ferrer, 145 F. App'x at 119-20 (holding Kentucky Human Rights Act did not apply extraterritorially); Campbell, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d at 627-33 (holding California's Fair Employment and Housing Act did not apply to a plaintiff working on the high seas); Union Underwear, 50 S.W.3d at 193 (holding Kentucky Human Rights Act did not apply extraterritorially);

Judkins, 483 F. Supp. 2d at 65 (holding a non-resident was not entitled to Maine Human Rights Commission's longer filing period for age discrimination suit against a Maine college, because all alleged discriminatory acts took place at the college's campus in the Carribean); Wahlstrom v. Metro-N. Commuter R.R., 89 F. Supp. 2d 506, 527-28 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding a plaintiff failed to state a cause of action under the New York City Human Rights Law because the plaintiff did not allege that any cognizable harassment occurred while the train on which she worked was within New York City, even though she and the male engineer traveled together in New York City, the train company's headquarters was in New York City and the company distributed employment policies from its office there); Arnold v. Cargill, Inc., NO. Civ. 012086(DWF/AJB), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13045, 2002 WL 1576141, *1-*4 (D. Minn. Jul. 15, 2002) (holding Minnesota Human Rights Act did not apply extraterritorially).

Accordingly, the court dismisses the ICRA sexual harassment claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas with prejudice, Mss. Grant and Thomas are not residents of Iowa and all of the alleged sexual harassment occurred entirely outside of Iowa.[15]

15. The court recognizes that the dispatchers' failures to respond to the sexual harassment complaints is an element of the claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas. However, it is unclear where these dispatchers were located at the time they ignored such complaints. This is certainly not a case in which "every decision that gives rise to [the plaintiffs'] claim[s]" occurred in Iowa. Union Underwear, 50 S.W.3d at 193 n.1 (Lambert, C.J., dissenting). The court expresses no view as to whether the extraterritoriality principle would bar the retaliation claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 145) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as follows:

(1) Ms. Janet Boot and Ms. Remcey Jeunenne Peeples are DISMISSED from this lawsuit WITH PREJUDICE.

(2) Ms. Nicole Cinquemano's Title VII and ICRA sexual harassment claims are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. Ms. Cinquemano's Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims survive summary judgment.

(3) The Title VII and ICRA retaliation claims of Ms. Barbara Grant and Ms. Latesha Thomas are DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. The ICRA sexual harassment claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas are likewise DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. The Title VII sexual harassment claims of Mss. Grant and Thomas survive summary judgment.

(4) All of Ms. Cindy Moffett's claims survive to trial.

(5) The EEOC is BARRED from seeking relief at trial to the same extent the Plaintiffs-Interveners are barred.

(6) The EEOC is ORDERED to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before June 4, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

(7) Ms. Boot, Ms. Peeples and the EEOC shall pay CRST's ordinary costs. CRST may file its request for costs 10 court days after the disposition of the entire case.

(8) Any application for attorneys' fees may be filed within 20 court days after disposition of the entire case.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

ORDER

Defendant's Motion for Order to Show Cause ("Motion") (docket no. 222) is GRANTED. Even if the court assumes without deciding that the Motion presents a nonjurisdictional question that may not be raised at any stage in the litigation, the court deems the Motion to be timely given the complex procedural history of this case and the court's recent dismissal of the EEOC's "pattern or practice claim."

After considering the parties' arguments with respect to the Motion, the court has doubts about the EEOC's ability to pursue this matter in whole or in part at trial. In Delight Wholesale, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals stated:

> The permissible scope of an EEOC lawsuit is not confined to the specific allegations in the charge; rather, it may extend to any discrimination like or related to the substance of the allegations in the charge and which reasonably can be expected to grow out of the investigation triggered by the charge. The original charge is sufficient to support EEOC action, including a civil suit, for any discrimination stated in the charge or developed during a reasonable investigation of the charge, so long as the additional allegations of discrimination are included in the reasonable cause determination and subject to a conciliation proceeding.

973 F.2d 664, 668-69 (8th Cir. 1992) (emphasis added and citations omitted). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals held that certain claims not included in the original charge of discrimination were "properly before the district court" but stressed that the EEOC discovered the unincluded claims during a reasonable investigation of the charge, the unincluded claims were "clearly like or related to the substance of the EEOC charge," the "EEOC included the [unincluded claims] in its reasonable cause determination" and the "EEOC gave [the employer] an opportunity to conciliate [the unincluded claims]." Id. at 669; *see also EEOC v. It is difficult to believe Congress directed the [EEOC] . . . [to] institute such litigation before it makes a determination.").

"Nothing less than a 'reasonable' effort to resolve with the employer the issues raised by the complainant will do." EEOC v. Asplundh Tree Expert Co., 340 F.3d 1256, 1260 (11th Cir. 2003). On June 1, 2009, at 9:00 a.m., the court shall hold an evidentiary hearing in the Temporary Courthouse at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The EEOC shall bear the burden to prove its allegations are properly before the court and should be presented to a jury. The court has reserved the entire day for the evidentiary hearing.

A completed chart, as well as witness and exhibit lists, shall be filed on or before May 29, 2009, at 5 p.m.

The court anticipates affording the parties the opportunity to submit post-hearing briefs. The Final Pretrial Conference is RESET to June 15, 2009, at 9:00 a.m.

DECLARATION OF PAMELA BLOOMER

PAMELA BLOOMER, under penalty of perjury, states:

Appendix K

1. I am an investigator with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"). I investigated the charges of discrimination that preceded this lawsuit, including Monika Starke's charge, EEOC Charge No. 260-2005-06856C (the "Starke charge"), and Remcey Peeples's charge, EEOC Charge No. 26A-2006-00561C (the "Peeples charge").

2. I conducted conciliation efforts on behalf of EEOC in both the Starke and Peeples charges.

3. The Letter of Determination ("LOD") in the Starke charge was issued on July 12, 2007. The LOD asked CRST to submit a conciliation proposal within 14 days.

4. CRST's counsel, Thomas Wolle, left a voicemail message for me on August 6, 2007 and sent a letter on August 7, 2007 indicating that CRST was interested in participating in conciliation.

5. I sent a fax and left a voicemail message for Mr. Wolle on August 8, 2007 again asking for a conciliation proposal.

6. Later on August 8, 2007 I received a voicemail from Mr. Wolle, indicating he wanted EEOC to suggest a proposal for conciliation instead of the other way around.

7. I spoke with Mr. Wolle regarding EEOC's proposed terms for conciliation on August 17, 2007. We discussed several issues including EEOC's request that a monitor be appointed to examine the employer's workplace to discover and eliminate sexual harassment, and relief for the class. He told me he wanted more information regarding the class. I was not able to provide names of all class members at that time, or an indication of the size of the class, but I believe I told him that EEOC would require as part of conciliation that CRST send a letter to past and present employees to help identify class members so settlements could be paid to them.

8. Mr. Wolle told me on August 17, 2007 that he would think over EEOC's proposal and would try to call me back.

9. We traded voicemails on August 20 and 21. I then called Mr. Wolle on August 24, 2007, and he told me that he had spoken to Ms. Starke's counsel, that it did not appear conciliation would be successful, and that he would send a confirming email. I told him the next step after conciliation would be EEOC's internal decision whether to litigate on behalf of Ms. Starke and the class or provide Ms. Starke with a Right to Sue letter.

10. Attached as Exhibit 1 is the email Mr. Wolle sent me on August 27, 2007, indicating that CRST did not wish to engage in conciliation efforts.

11. Attached as Exhibit 2 is EEOC's letter sent to CRST on August 28, 2007, which confirms that conciliation was not successful.

12. Regarding the Peeples charge, the LOD was issued September 27, 2007.

13. I called James Barnes, CRST's Human Resources Manager, on October 24, 2007, regarding EEOC's request for a conciliation proposal.

14. Attached as Exhibit 3 is an October 25, 2007 email from Mr. Barnes, indicating that he was waiting for an answer from outside counsel regarding conciliation.

15. Attached as Exhibit 4 is an October 26, 2007 email from Mr. Barnes indicating CRST had decided "not to take part in the conciliation process for Ms. Peeples."

16. Attached as Exhibit 5 is EEOC's letter sent to CRST on October 26, 2007, which confirms that conciliation was not successful.

ORDER

TABLES INTENTIONALLY OMITTED

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment Based on Judicial Estoppel ("Motion") (docket no. 144).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS[1]

On February 13, 2009, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") and Plaintiff-Intervenor Monika Starke ("Ms. Starke") filed Resistances (docket nos. 160 & 163). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket no. 178).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

1. A more complete recitation of the prior proceedings is set forth in the court's Order (docket no. 197). The court assumes complete familiarity with the prior proceedings.

Appendix L

III. THE MERITS

A. Summary of Argument

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to (1) dismiss Ms. Starke's federal and state law claims in the "Plaintiffs'/ Intervenors' Complaint" (docket no. 49) and (2) bar the EEOC from seeking monetary and other relief on behalf of Ms. Christina Payne and Ms. Robin Timmons.[2] CRST invokes the doctrine of judicial estoppel and points out that all three women (1) filed for bankruptcy after their alleged sexual harassment occurred, (2) failed to disclose any cause of action against CRST in their bankruptcy filings; (3) had their debts discharged under Chapter 7 or are presently in repayment under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code; and (4) seek monetary damages from CRST in this action notwithstanding their prior false assertions to the bankruptcy courts.

Neither Ms. Starke nor the EEOC disputes the underlying facts. Rather, Ms. Starke argues "[s]ummary judgment is inappropriate against [her] because judicial estoppels [sic] is an affirmative defense that had to have been, but was not timely pleaded[.]" Resistance (docket no. 160), at 1. Ms. Starke also claims her failure to disclose in her bankruptcy proceeding was wholly inadvertent--she points out she is German, struggles with English and hired an attorney to help her file for bankruptcy. Finally, Ms. Starke points out she recently moved to reopen her bankruptcy case to disclose the possibility that she might recover a judgment in this case.

2. CRST also asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of Ms. Antonia Aguilar, Ms. Linda Austin and Ms. Catherine Howard. On May 11, 2009, the court issued an Order (docket no. 223), in which it barred the EEOC from seeking relief for these three women on statute of limitations grounds. Therefore, the court need not discuss CRST's arguments with respect to Ms. Aguilar, Ms. Austin and Ms. Howard in the instant Order. Out of an abundance of caution, however, the court has reviewed the parties' arguments and would hold the EEOC is estopped from seeking relief for them.

The EEOC claims it is categorically immune from the doctrine of judicial estoppel, because it is a federal agency with its own interests. The EEOC points out it was not a party to any bankruptcy proceeding, and Ms. Payne and Ms. Timmons are not parties to this case. The EEOC agrees with Ms. Starke that there is not "one piece of evidence that could establish the necessary intent to permit [the] inference" that Ms. Starke, Ms. Payne or Ms. Timmons intended to mislead a bankruptcy court. Resistance (docket no. 163), at 12. The EEOC also agrees that Ms. Starke's motion to reopen her bankruptcy proceeding should shield her from the judicial estoppel doctrine.

In Reply, CRST largely reasserts the arguments in its Motion. Further, CRST opines that the EEOC's argument that it is categorically immune from the doctrine of judicial estoppel is misplaced and contrary to Supreme Court precedent, which recognizes that the prior conduct of allegedly aggrieved persons may limit the relief that the EEOC may obtain in an enforcement action under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5. CRST opines that Ms. Starke's motion to reopen her bankruptcy proceeding came too late and, in any event, the bankruptcy court denied her motion because she failed to prosecute it.

B. Standard for Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394, 395 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). The nonmoving party must offer proof "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. "'Evidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment.'" Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., 447 F.3d 569, 578 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Mayer v. Nextel W. Corp., 318 F.3d 803, 809 (8th Cir. 2003)).

C. Summary Judgment Facts

The facts are largely undisputed. The court first discusses Ms. Starke and then Ms. Payne and Ms. Timmons.

1. Ms. Starke

In July and August of 2005, Ms. Starke's lead drivers, Messrs. Bob Smith and David Goodman, allegedly sexually harassed her while she was training to become a CRST truck driver. In October of 2005, Ms. Starke and her husband filed a voluntary petition as joint debtors under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas. They did not list a claim for sexual harassment among their assets in their bankruptcy petition, any schedule attached thereto or in their statement of financial affairs ("SOFA"). To the contrary, on Schedule B, Category 21, of their bankruptcy petition, which requests identification of "[o]ther contingent and unliquidated claims of every nature," the Starkes affirmatively checked a box indicating "None." Def.'s App'x at 2956. The Starkes also listed CRST as a creditor on Schedule F in the amount of $ 3,100. The Starkes declared under penalty of perjury that their petition, schedules and SOFA were true and correct to the best of their knowledge, information and belief.

In December of 2005, Ms. Starke filed a charge of sex discrimination with the EEOC and the Iowa Civil Rights Commission ("ICRC") against CRST based upon the conduct of Messrs. Smith and Goodman.

In January of 2006, the Starkes amended their Schedule F to list an additional unsecured creditor but did not disclose a potential civil rights claim against CRST. In March of 2006, the bankruptcy court granted the Starkes a full discharge of their debts, including the $3,100 they owed CRST.

In September of 2007, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke and "a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST.]" Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1. In September of 2008, the court granted Ms. Starke permission to intervene in the instant action.

In December of 2008, the Starkes filed a motion to reopen their bankruptcy proceeding to add as a potential asset under Schedule B their pending federal and state law claims against CRST.

Appendix L

2. Ms. Payne

Mr. Mark Hoagland allegedly sexually harassed Ms. Payne sometime between January and April of 2005.

In October of 2005, Ms. Payne filed a voluntary petition and plan under Chapter 13 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Ohio under the name of "Christina Sprinkle." Ms. Payne did not list a claim for sexual harassment against CRST among her assets in that petition for bankruptcy, any schedule attached thereto or in her SOFA. To the contrary, on Schedule B, Category 20 of her petition, requesting the identification of "[o]ther contingent and unliquidated claims of every nature," Ms. Payne checked the box indicating she had "None." Def. App'x at 2088. Ms. Payne declared under penalty of perjury that her petition, schedules and SOFA were true and correct to the best of her knowledge, information and belief. In December of 2005, the bankruptcy court approved her plan, which paid her creditors five cents for every dollar owed.

In September of 2007, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke and "a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST.]" Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1. In October of 2008, the EEOC identified Ms. Payne as one of its "class members" for whom it seeks monetary and other relief.

In June of 2008, the bankruptcy trustee moved to dismiss Ms. Payne's bankruptcy for non-payment. In November of 2008, the trustee filed an affidavit of default in support of the trustee's motion to dismiss. In December of 2008, Ms. Payne filed a resistance to the motion to dismiss, in which she acknowledged she was in arrears but informed the court she was newly employed and planned to pay off the balance of her payment plan. She did not amend her schedules or otherwise inform the court or trustee that she was a "class member" in the instant EEOC enforcement action.

3. Ms. Timmons

In December of 2005 and January of 2006, Mr. John Boyle allegedly sexually harassed Ms. Timmons.

In September of 2007, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke and "a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST.]" Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1.

In March of 2008, Ms. Timmons and her husband filed a voluntary petition as joint debtors under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code in the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri. Ms. Timmons did not disclose any potential cause of action against CRST as an asset of her bankruptcy estate. To the contrary, she affirmatively entered "None" in response to Category 21 of Schedule B of her petition, which requires the identification of any "[o]ther contingent and liquidated claims of every nature[.]" Def.'s App'x at 3171. The Timmonses listed CRST as a creditor, however, in the amount of $5,236.09. Based upon her representations, made under penalty of perjury, the bankruptcy court discharged the Timmonses' debts in June of 2008.

Appendix L

In October of 2008, the EEOC identified Ms. Timmons as a "class member" in this action. Ms. Timmons has not moved to reopen her bankruptcy to list her status as a "class member" in this EEOC enforcement action as a potential asset, notwithstanding the fact that she would receive money the EEOC wins on her behalf.

D. Analysis

For the reasons stated in the Motion and the Reply, the court shall grant the Motion. Ms. Starke is judicially estopped from pursing her federal and state law claims in this action because she failed to disclose them in her bankruptcy proceeding. Similarly, the court holds the EEOC is judicially estopped from seeking relief on behalf of Ms. Christina Payne and Ms. Robin Timmons. The court finds all three women have made false assertions to federal bankruptcy courts and are attempting to profit from those assertions in this court. The court finds the actions of the three women were not inadvertent.

The judicial estoppel doctrine "'generally prevents a party from prevailing in one phase of a case on an argument and then relying on a contradictory argument to prevail in another phase.'" New Hampshire v. Maine, 532 U.S. 742, 750, 121 S. Ct. 1808, 149 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2001) (quoting Pegram v. Herdrich, 530 U.S. 211, 227 n.8, 120 S. Ct. 2143, 147 L. Ed. 2d 164 (2000)). Put simply, "'[w]here a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position, he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him.'" Id. (quoting Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U.S. 680, 689, 15 S. Ct. 555, 39 L. Ed. 578 (1895)). The purpose of the judicial estoppel doctrine is "to protect the integrity of the judicial process by prohibiting parties from deliberately changing positions according to the exigencies of the moment." Id. (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

There is no rubric or settled formula for a court to apply when deciding whether to apply the doctrine of judicial estoppel. Id. Each case will likely turn on its own facts, and courts must not "establish inflexible prerequisites" before applying the doctrine. Id. at 751. Rather, the Supreme Court has identified four factors that will "typically" inform a decision to apply the judicial estoppel doctrine. Id. at 750. The Supreme Court stated:

> First, a party's later position must be clearly inconsistent with its earlier position. Second, courts regularly inquire whether the party has succeeded in persuading a court to accept that party's earlier position, so that judicial acceptance of an inconsistent position in a later proceeding would create the perception that either the first or the second court was misled. Absent success in a prior proceeding, a party's later inconsistent position introduces no risk of inconsistent court determinations, and thus poses little threat to judicial integrity. A third consideration is whether the party seeking to assert an inconsistent position would > derive an unfair advantage or impose an unfair detriment on the opposing party if not estopped.

Id. at 750-51 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted).

"In the bankruptcy context, a party may be judicially estopped from asserting a cause of action not raised in a reorganization plan or otherwise mentioned in the debtor's schedules or disclosure statements." Stallings v. Hussmann Corp., 447 F.3d 1041, 1047 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing In re Coastal Plains, Inc., 179 F.3d 197, 208 (5th Cir. 1999)). "A debtor's failure to list a claim in the 'mandatory bankruptcy filings is tantamount to a representation that no such claim existed.'" Id. (citing In re Superior Crewboats, Inc., 374 F.3d 330, 335 (5th Cir. 2004)). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals and this court routinely dismiss civil actions, including civil rights actions, after a plaintiff/debtor affirmatively misrepresents to a bankruptcy court that her bankruptcy estate did not possess such an action and the bankruptcy court relied on the misrepresentation in some measure. See, e.g., Strong v. Am.'s Ctr. Food Serv. Partners/Levy Rests. Ltd. P'ship, 189 F. App'x 587, 587 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Strong represented in her earlier bankruptcy proceeding that she had no such suit, the bankruptcy court relied on that representation in granting her a no-asset discharge, and allowing Strong to proceed with this claim after her discharge would give her an unfair advantage."); U.S. ex rel. Gebert v. Trans. Admin. Servs., 260 F.3d 909, 917-19 (8th Cir. 2001) (affirming dismissal of qui tam suit after plaintiffs/debtors failed to disclose suit in their bankruptcy proceeding and bankruptcy court granted them a discharge); Tokheim v. Ga.-Pac. Gypsum LLC, No. 07-CV-3057-MWB, 606 F. Supp. 2d 988, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27239, 2009 WL 873990, *6-*10 (N.D. Iowa Mar. 31, 2009) (Bennett, J.) (dismissing sex discrimination case on judicial estoppel grounds and observing that "[n]umerous federal courts of appeals, including the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, have held that the omission of a cause of action as an asset in bankruptcy provides an appropriate basis for imposing judicial estoppel"); cf. Stallings, 447 F.3d at 1046-49 (holding district court abused its discretion in applying the judicial estoppel doctrine, where the bankruptcy court never discharged the debts of the plaintiff/debtor and the plaintiff/debtor "could not have known at the time he filed his bankruptcy petition to disclose [his] claims" because he was already in Chapter 13 when the facts giving rise to his claim occurred). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals and this court do "not allow the debtor to conceal its claims, get rid of its creditors 'on the cheap,' and start over with a 'bundle of rights.'" Stallings, 447 F.3d at 1048 (citing Payless Wholesale Distribs., Inc. v. Alberto Culver, Inc., 989 F.2d 570, 571 (1st Cir. 1993)). "Because the debtor obtained judicial relief on the representation that no such claims existed, the debtor is prohibited from resurrecting such claims and obtaining relief on the opposite basis.'" Id.

The judicial estoppel doctrine clearly applies to Ms. Starke, Ms. Payne and Ms. Timmons. Each of these women (1) affirmatively represented to a bankruptcy court that she did not have a claim against CRST yet presses such claim in the instant action; (2) persuaded a bankruptcy court to rely upon the false assertion that no claim existed to either obtain a no-asset discharge under Chapter 7 or obtain relief from her debts under Chapter 13; and (3) would gain an unfair advantage in the present case were she allowed to profit from her false assertion to the bankruptcy court. Indeed, the circumstances surrounding each woman's case present the classic case wherein other courts have invoked judicial estoppel. See, e.g., Stallings, 447 F.3d at 1048 ("[A] debtor who filed his bankruptcy petition, subsequently receives a right-to-sue letter from the [EEOC], and then fails to amend his bankruptcy petition to add his lawsuit against his employer as a potential asset is estopped from bringing the lawsuit because the debtor 'knew about the undisclosed claims and had a motive to conceal them from the bankruptcy court.'" (quoting DeLeon v. Comcar Indus., Inc., 321 F.3d 1289, 1291 (11th Cir. 2003)).

The actions of Ms. Starke and Ms. Timmons are especially galling. Ms. Starke and Ms. Timmons used the bankruptcy process to discharge or reduce debts owed to CRST and now seek to recover funds from CRST free and clear of the bankruptcy process. Judicial estoppel is "especially" appropriate under such circumstances. See New Hampshire, 532 U.S. at 750 ("Where a party assumes a certain position in a legal proceeding, and succeeds in maintaining that position, he may not thereafter, simply because his interests have changed, assume a contrary position, especially if it be to the prejudice of the party who has acquiesced in the position formerly taken by him.'" (Emphasis added.)).

Appendix L

Notwithstanding her professed reliance upon counsel and unfamiliarity with English and the American legal system, Ms. Starke's actions certainly are not inadvertent or unintentional. See Stallings, 447 F.3d at 1048 ("'A debtor's failure to satisfy its statutory disclosure duty is 'inadvertent' only when, in general, the debtor either lacks knowledge of the undisclosed claims or has no motive for their concealment.'" (quoting Coastal, 179 F.3d at 210 (emphasis in Coastal)); Cannon-Stokes v. Potter, 453 F.3d 446, 449 (7th Cir. 2006) ("[B]ad legal advice does not relieve the client of the consequences of her own acts."); Tokheim, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27239, 2009 WL 873990, at *6-*10 (rejecting advice of counsel defense). The fact Ms. Payne and Ms. Timmons have not undertaken any efforts to inform the bankruptcy courts of their false assertions and the fact that Ms. Starke only made a halfhearted, abortive and unsuccessful effort to do so are especially telling of their intentions. See, e.g., EEOC v. J.D. Streett & Co., No. 05-CV-4186-JPG, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78906, 2006 WL 3076667, *4-*5 (S.D. Ill. Oct. 30, 2006) (pointing out that a plaintiff's failure to amend bankruptcy filings "is evidence that her pursuit of this case in light of her failure to list her cause of action was no unintentional error").

The judicial estoppel doctrine applies part-and-parcel to the EEOC, notwithstanding the fact that it is the "master of its own case" and does not merely stand in the shoes of the allegedly aggrieved persons for whom it seeks relief in this action under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5. EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 291, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002). Another district court recently surveyed the law and reasoned:

Appendix L

Judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine. It is clear that had the Cooks filed this action judicial estoppel would apply and bar them from proceeding with their claims for monetary damages. It is also clear that the Cooks will receive any monetary damages recovered by the EEOC in this action. The court fails to see how it would be equitable to allow the Cooks to receive monetary damages recovered by the EEOC on their behalf after the Bankruptcy Court discharged their debts in reliance on their false disclosures when they would not be entitled to receive such monetary damages had they filed the action on their own behalf. Such a result would allow the Cooks to have their cake and eat it too, and would represent the type of abuse which judicial estoppel is designed to preclude.

While not applying judicial estoppel, numerous courts . . . have recognized that where equity would preclude a claimant from seeking relief, it also operates to preclude the EEOC from seeking relief on the claimant's behalf. See e.g. EEOC v. Sidley Austin, LLP, 437 F.3d 695 (7th Cir.2006) (recognizing that collateral estoppel prevents EEOC from recovering damages for a claimant who had previously litigated the same claim); EEOC v. United States Steel Corp., 921 F.2d 489, 496 (3d Cir. 1990) ("By claiming or accepting individual relief won by the EEOC, the individuals would > necessarily concede that the EEOC was their representative and that they were embraced by the EEOC's judgment. For those individuals who had previously brought their own suits against USX and lost on the merits, this concession would be fatal. Having had their day in court, these individuals could not relitigate the same claim through a representative any more than they could relitigate the same claim on their own behalf."); EEOC v. McLean Trucking Co., 525 F.2d 1007 (6th Cir. 1975) (finding that a claimant's acceptance of an arbitration award and his filing of a separate action precluded the EEOC from basing a lawsuit based solely on the claimant's charge).

EEOC v. Dave's Detailing, Inc., No. 3:07-CV-516-S, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36202, 2008 WL 1968315, *3 & n.3 (W.D. Ky. May 2, 2008) (citations omitted). In short, the Supreme Court has explicitly recognized that equity may preclude the EEOC from obtaining relief on behalf of an allegedly aggrieved individual, and judicial estoppel is an equitable doctrine. The court respectfully disagrees with other district courts which have held, without citing any controlling legal authority, that the EEOC is categorically immune from a judicial estoppel defense. See, e.g., EEOC v. Tobacco Superstores, Inc., No. 3:05CV00218-WRW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43923, 2008 WL 2328330, *8 (E.D. Ark. Jun. 4, 2008); EEOC v. Digital Connections, Inc., No. 3:05-0710, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69529, 2006 WL 2792219, *3 (M.D. Tenn. Sept. 26, 2006); EEOC v. Apria Healthcare Grp., Inc., 222 F.R.D. 608, 613 (E.D. Mo. 2004). The court will not permit the EEOC to help Ms. Starke, Ms. Payne or Ms. Timmons profit from their false assertions to the bankruptcy courts or otherwise allow the EEOC to denigrate the integrity of the judicial system.

This brings the court to Ms. Starke's final argument. As previously indicated, Ms. Starke argues "[s]ummary judgment is inappropriate against [her] because judicial estoppels [sic] is an affirmative defense that had to have been, but was not timely pleaded[.]" Resistance (docket no. 160), at 1.[3] Even if the court assumes Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(c)[4] required CRST to list judicial estoppel as an affirmative defense in its responsive pleadings, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has "eschewed a literal interpretation of [Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(c)] that places form over substance . . . ." and clings to the principle that, "'[w]hen an affirmative defense is raised in the trial court in a manner that does not result in unfair surprise, technical failure to comply with Rule 8(c) is not fatal.'" First Union Nat'l Bank v. Pictet Overseas Trust Corp., Ltd., 477 F.3d 616, 622 (8th Cir. 2007) (quoting Fin. Timing Publ'ns, Inc. v. Compugraphic Corp., 893 F.2d 936, 944 n.9 (8th Cir. 1990)). Here, Ms. Starke does not allege she suffered prejudice from CRST's failure to list judicial estoppel as an affirmative defense in its responsive pleadings, and the court discerns no prejudice to her. Ms. Starke knew or should have known of the possibility of the judicial estoppel defense no later than December 30, 2008, when counsel for CRST asked her about her bankruptcy at her deposition. Ms. Starke certainly knew of CRST's intention to pursue a judicial estoppel defense soon enough to make a half-hearted attempt to reopen her bankruptcy proceeding. In any event, judicial estoppel is designed to protect the integrity of the judicial process and may be raised sua sponte by the court even if not raised as an affirmative defense by a party. Cathcart v. Flagstar Corp., No. 97-1977, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 14496, 1998 WL 390834, *8 n.2 (4th Cir. 1998); see, e.g., Weiss v. Allstate Ins. Co., 512 F. Supp. 2d 463, 468 (E.D. La. 2007) (holding defendant did not waive judicial estoppel defense by failing to include it in answer, where defendant raised the defense for the first time in a motion to summary judgment in part because the plaintiffs did not allege prejudice); Lett v. Reliable Ruskin, No. 1:05cv479-WHA, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50541, 2006 WL 2056582, *4-*5 (M.D. Ala. Jul. 24, 2006) (reaching same conclusion on similar facts as Weiss and holding that "twenty days is more than enough notice for Lett to have prepared arguments to counter Rushkin's judicial estoppel claims"). The only two cases Ms. Starke cites in support of her waiver argument are clearly distinguishable. Cf. United States v. McCaskey, 9 F.3d 368, 378 (5th Cir. 1993) (holding party was not permitted to raise judicial estoppel defense for first time on appeal); Altman v. Altman, 653 F.2d 755, 758 (3d Cir. 1981) (same).

Appendix L

IV. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 144) is GRANTED. Ms. Starke is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE from the instant lawsuit. The EEOC is BARRED from seeking relief in this action on behalf of Ms. Payne and Ms. Timmons. The EEOC is ORDERED to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before May 14, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

Ms. Starke and the EEOC shall pay CRST's ordinary costs. CRST may file its request for costs 10 court days after the disposition of the entire case. Now that CRST is a "prevailing party" as to Ms. Starke, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k), CRST may file an application for attorneys' fees from Ms. Starke within 20 court days after disposition of the entire case.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED this 13th day of May, 2009.

[TABLE OF CONTENTS INTENTIONALLY OMITTED]

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s Motion for Summary Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations and Other Grounds ("Motion") (docket no. 147).

II. RELEVANT PRIOR PROCEEDINGS [1]

A. Administrative Proceedings

1. Ms. Starke's Charge of Discrimination

On December 1, 2005, Plaintiff-Intervener Monika Starke ("Ms. Starke") presented a Charge of

1. A more complete recitation of the prior proceedings is set forth in the court's Order (docket no. 197). Once again, the claims of Plaintiffs-Interveners Monika Starke, Janet Boot, Barbara Grant, Cindy Moffett, Remcey Jeunenne Peeples, Latesha Thomas and Nicole Ann Cinquemano are not at issue.

Discrimination ("Charge") to Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"). Ms. Starke alleged that her employer, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST"), "discriminated against [her] on the basis of . . . sex . . . , in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.,] as amended" ("Title VII"). Def.'s App'x at 2998. Ms. Starke alleged the following "particulars" in her Charge:

> I was hired by [CRST] on June 22, 2005 in the position of Truck Driver. Since my employment began with [CRST,] I have been subjected to sexual harassment on two occasions by my Lead Trainers. On July 7, 2005, Bob Smith, Lead Trainer[,] began to make sexual remarks to me whenever he gave me instructions. . . . On July 14, 2005, I contacted the dispatcher and was told that I could not get off the truck until the next day. On July 18, 2005 through August 3, 2005, David Goodman, Lead Trainer, forced me to have unwanted sex with him on several occasions while we were traveling in order to get a passing grade.

Id. Further, Ms. Starke alleged that CRST "did not state why I was subjected to sexual harassment[,] which created a hostile work environment." Id.

Ms. Starke asked the EEOC to file her Charge and cross-file it with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission ("ICRC"). Pursuant to a work-sharing agreement,[2] the EEOC formally received the Charge on behalf of both agencies and deemed the Charge to be "initially instituted" with the ICRC. (In the work-sharing agreement, the EEOC and ICRC reciprocally designated each other as agents for receiving charges of unlawful employment practices.) The EEOC sent a copy of the Charge to the ICRC, notified the ICRC that the Charge "is to be initially investigated by the EEOC," id. at 3000, and began its investigation. The ICRC had waived its right to exclusive jurisdiction over charges initially instituted with it. Here, the ICRC filed the Charge on December 5, 2005 but apparently stayed its own investigation pending the EEOC proceedings.

2. Ms. Starke's limitations period

Because the EEOC deemed the Charge to be "initially instituted" with the ICRC, Ms. Starke's Charge was timely filed as to any alleged unlawful employment practice occurring on or after February 4, 2005, i.e., any such practice occurring within 300 days of the filing of the Charge. In relevant part, Title VII's statute of limitations provides:

> A charge under this section shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred . . . ,

2. For further explanation of the work-sharing agreement between the EEOC and the ICRC, see Millage v. City of Sioux City, 258 F. Supp. 2d 976, 985-86 (N.D. Iowa 2003) (Bennett, C.J.).

> except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State . . . with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice . . . , such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred . . . .

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(e)(1); see, e.g., Occidental Life Ins. Co. of Cal. v. EEOC, 432 U.S. 355, 359-60 n.8, 97 S. Ct. 2447, 53 L. Ed. 2d 402 (1977) ("If a charge has been initially filed with or referred to a state . . . agency, it must be filed with the EEOC within 300 days after the practice occurred . . . ."). An influential treatise explains

> there is a dual aspect to the Title VII limitations periods; they have a retrospective, as well as a prospective, aspect. In other words, not only must charges be filed within 180 (or 300) days after a discriminatory event, but also, as a general rule, the aggrieved party can only achieve redress for discriminatory acts which occurred 180 (or 300) days prior to the filing of charges.

4 Lex K. Larson, Employment Discrimination § 72.02, at 72-5 (2d ed. July 2008); see, e.g., AMTRAK v. Morgan, 536 U.S. 101, 109, 122 S. Ct. 2061, 153 L. Ed. 2d 106 (2002) ("An individual must file a charge within the statutory time period and serve notice upon the person against whom the charge is made. In a State that has an entity with the authority to grant or seek relief with respect to the alleged unlawful practice, an employee who initially filed a grievance with that agency must file the charge with the EEOC within 300 days of the employment practice."); Millage v. City of Sioux City, 258 F. Supp. 2d 976, 984-86 (N.D. Iowa 2003) (Bennett, C.J.) (discussing the ICRC and concluding that in Iowa an administrative charge is timely so long as it is filed within 300 days).

B. The EEOC's Complaint

On September 27, 2007, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke "and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] . . . ." Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1. Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3) and 42 U.S.C. § 1981a, the EEOC brings suit in its own name "to correct [CRST's] unlawful employment practices on the basis of sex, and to provide appropriate relief to [Ms.] Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] who were adversely affected by such practices." First Amended Complaint ("EEOC's Complaint") (docket no. 8), at 1.[3] The EEOC generally alleges that Ms. Starke and the other similarly situated women "were adversely affected . . . when their lead drivers or team drivers subjected them to sexual harassment and to a sexually hostile working environment based on their gender, and CRST failed to prevent, correct, and protect them . . . ." Id. Notably, the EEOC did not allege that CRST was engaged in "a pattern or practice" of illegal sex-based discrimination or otherwise plead a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6.

At present, the EEOC seeks monetary and equitable relief on behalf of approximately 150 allegedly aggrieved persons at the trial of this matter. The court refers to the "similarly situated female employees" who are referenced in the EEOC's Complaint as "allegedly aggrieved persons" and not as "class members." See Order (docket no. 197), at 9-10 (citing in part 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) (referring to "[t]he person or persons aggrieved" and "the person aggrieved")). The phrase "allegedly aggrieved persons" comports with the language of § 2000e-5 and reflects the fact that the EEOC "may seek specific relief for a group of aggrieved individuals without first obtaining class certification pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23." Gen. Tel. Co. of Nw., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 333-34, 100 S. Ct. 1698, 64 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1980) (footnote omitted). For example, the EEOC may pursue relief on behalf of a group of allegedly aggrieved persons "even though competing interests are involved," id. at 331, or even if there is "a huge variance in the nature and extent of the injuries suffered" within such group, In re Bemis Co., 279 F.3d 419, 421 (7th Cir. 2002) (Posner, J.). The EEOC is "the master of its own case" and possesses statutory authority to proceed on behalf of allegedly aggrieved persons without their consent. EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 291-92, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002). Any limitation upon the EEOC to sue only on behalf of "similarly situated female employees" in this case was self-imposed.

C. Answer

On November 30, 2007, CRST filed an Answer and Affirmative Defenses (docket no. 11). On May 1, 2008, CRST filed an Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses ("Answer") (docket no. 36) to assert an additional affirmative defense. CRST denies the substance of the EEOC's Complaint and asserts seven affirmative defenses, including waiver or release, failure to exhaust administrative remedies and "untimel[iness]." Answer at 2.

D. Motion

On February 13, 2009, CRST filed the Motion. On March 16, 2009, the EEOC filed a Resistance (docket no. 165). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket no. 180). On April 14, 2009, the EEOC filed a Surreply (docket no. 192).

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion, but the court finds oral argument is not appropriate. The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

III. STANDARD FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." *Hartnagel v. Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). IV. THE MERITS

A. Arguments

1. Motion

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking monetary and equitable relief on behalf of twelve women insofar as they allege they were sexually harassed before February 4, 2005, i.e., more than 300 days prior to the filing of Ms. Starke's Charge on December 1, 2005. Specifically, CRST asks the court to dismiss the "claims" the EEOC is pursuing on behalf of (1) Ms. Antonia Aguilar, (2) Ms. Linda Austin, (3) Ms. Kelli Carney (in part), (4) Ms. Patrice Cohen, (5) Ms. Catherine Howard, (6) Ms. Geraldine Leach, (7) Ms. Margaret McCain, (8) Ms. Karen McCall, (9) Ms. Rachel Perhealth, (10) Ms. Faith Shadden (in part), (11) Ms. Linda Skaggs (in part) and (12) Ms. Priscilla Stephenson (collectively, "the twelve women"). Motion (docket no. 147-5), at 8. CRST asserts the "claims" of the twelve women fall outside of § 2000e-5's relevant 300-day statute of limitations. CRST concedes that all the other women the EEOC disclosed in this case generally may "piggyback" on Ms. Starke's timely charge, because they allege they were sexually harassed on or after February 4, 2005 and the EEOC has asserted a pattern or practice claim in this litigation. Brief in Support of Motion (docket no. 147-6), at 9 (citations omitted); cf. Gen. Tel., 446 U.S. at 331 ("Any violations that the EEOC ascertains in the course of a reasonable investigation of the charging party's complaint are actionable."); EEOC v. Gen. Elec. Co., 532 F.2d 359, 364 (4th Cir. 1976) (permitting the EEOC to use a timely filed charge of discrimination as a "jurisdictional springboard").

In the alternative, CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of the twelve women under its inherent power to impose discovery sanctions. CRST argues:

> The parties have focused virtually all of their discovery on the period from January 1, 2005 to October 15, 2008. [The] EEOC should not be permitted, after discovery is closed, to attempt to extend the period in suit by several years. Moreover, the claims of only 13 [sic] of the 153 [allegedly aggrieved women] arose in whole or in part prior to February 4, 2005, and such a small number of sporadic claims over several years provides no basis at this late stage for EEOC to [seek relief] as far as 1997, when the earliest of the [women's] claims arose.

Id. at 10.

Finally, CRST presents the court with a number of independent reasons why the court should bar the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of Mss. Austin, Aguilar, Cohen, Leach, McCain, Shadden and Skaggs. Among other things, CRST argues (1) Mss. Aguilar, Leach, McCain, Shadden and Skaggs did not suffer severe or pervasive sexual harassment; (2) Mss. Cohen, Leach and McCain did not promptly report their allegations of sexual harassment to CRST; (3) CRST took prompt remedial action with respect to Ms. Shadden's allegation of sexual harassment; and (4) Mss. Austin, McCall and Cohen filed timely charges of discrimination with the EEOC but failed to file suit within ninety days after the EEOC issued them right-to-sue letters.

2. Resistance

The EEOC claims it is not bound by any statute of limitation. The EEOC opines that "[t]his is a case brought by the [EEOC] alleging a pattern or practice of tolerating a hostile work environment based on sexual harassment" that CRST wrongly construes "as if it were a single claim of discrimination brought by a private individual." Resistance at 4. The EEOC maintains it is immune from § 2000e-5's statute of limitations and may seek relief for victims of a pattern or practice of employment discrimination "as far back as the evidence warrants." Id. at 6.

The EEOC "expects to prove that the pattern or practice [of tolerating sexual harassment] extended at least back to 1997 when . . . [Ms.] Janet Boot was sexually harassed in the same manner as were later victims." Id. The EEOC characterizes the pattern or practice of sexual harassment at CRST as forming a "continuing violation" as contemplated in Morgan. The EEOC thus concludes no limitations period may be enforced "so long as one incident included in the hostile work environment occurred within the statutory period." Id. at 7.

Appendix M

The EEOC concedes that a number of district courts "have refused to include claimants beyond the 300 days" because of (1) "the language of [§ 2000e-5]" and (2) "the policies supporting repose." Id. The EEOC maintains these district courts were wrong. The EEOC avers that any distinction between § 2000e-6 and § 2000e-5 "is not useful" because, in its view, both statutes authorize pattern or practice cases and require "identical" elements of proof. Id. Without citing any controlling legal authority, the EEOC concludes that "there is no difference between pleading either statute." Id. at 11. The EEOC maintains that the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act of 2009, Pub. L. No. 111-2 (S 181), 123 Stat. 5 (Jan. 29, 2009) ("Ledbetter Act") evinces a generalized Congressional intent that "Title VII is to be broadly interpreted to reach systems of discrimination . . . without artificial reliance on the charge filing periods to exclude victims of those systems of discrimination." Id. at 11.

The EEOC resists CRST's alternative argument that the court impose a discovery sanction upon the EEOC and bar the EEOC from seeking relief for the twelve women. The EEOC states: "CRST's claim that [the] EEOC has added these early claims at a 'late stage,' because it agreed to focus discovery on the period after January 1, 2005, is simply false." Id. at 6. The EEOC represents to the court that it "always told" CRST that it intended to pursue claims as far back into the past as possible. Id. The EEOC concludes its "tactical decision that it did not have the resources to attempt to locate all of the potential victims of CRST's conduct does not preclude it from proving that the discriminatory environment existed and that identified victims are entitled to compensation." Id. (footnote omitted).

Finally, the EEOC resists all of CRST's independent reasons why the claims of Mss. Aguilar, Cohen, Leach, McCain, Shadden and Skaggs fail on their merits. The EEOC variously argues (1) the twelve women suffered severe and pervasive sexual harassment; (2) the twelve women promptly reported the harassment they suffered; (3) CRST failed to take prompt remedial action with respect to Ms. Shadden's allegation of sexual harassment; and (4) the failure of any "class member" to file her own lawsuit after receiving a right-to-sue letter from the EEOC does not bar the EEOC from seeking relief on her behalf at a later date.

3. Reply

In Reply, CRST reasserts many of the arguments in its Motion. CRST maintains that the EEOC's construction of § 2000e-5(e)(1) is absurd, because it would permit the EEOC to revive stale claims with impunity. Further, CRST argues the EEOC's arguments are misplaced. Drawing upon arguments in its contemporaneously filed "Motion for Summary Judgment on EEOC's Pattern or Practice Claim" (docket no. 150) ("Pattern or Practice Motion"), CRST maintains the EEOC has failed to present sufficient evidence to establish that CRST has engaged in "a pattern or practice [of tolerating sexual harassment]--much less one that extends back earlier than February 4, 2005." Reply at 6. Absent proof of a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment, the entire foundation of the EEOC's Resistance collapses.

Even if the court were to deny the Pattern or Practice Motion, CRST insists that the EEOC is "cavalierly dismiss[ing]" important distinctions between § 2000e-5 and § 2000e-6. CRST points out that, by its very terms, § 2000e-5 contains a limitations period. CRST maintains there is no textual support within § 2000e-5 for the EEOC's attempt to seek relief beyond the 300-day limitations period. CRST maintains Morgan is largely inapplicable to the case at bar, because each of the twelve women alleges different harassment by different harassers at different workplaces. CRST argues, however, that "given [the] EEOC's inability to muster any proof of a pattern or practice predating February 4, 2005, there is no need for the Court to address th[ese] [alternative] legal issue[s]." Id. at 9.

4. Surreply

The EEOC's arguments in its Surreply solely concern its ability to pursue monetary and other relief at trial on behalf of a thirteenth woman, Ms. Belinda Bedford. The court presents these arguments in Part V infra.

B. Analysis

1. Holding

On April 30, 2009, the court granted the Pattern or Practice Motion. See Order (docket no. 197), passim. After pointing out ambiguities in the EEOC's Complaint, the court "assume[d] without deciding that at least one of two legal principles is true: either (1) § [2000e-5] somehow permits the EEOC to pursue a pattern or practice claim and thereby render § [2000e-6] a mere redundancy in the law or (2) the EEOC has constructively amended its complaint to assert a § [2000e-6] claim against CRST in this lawsuit in addition to its § [2000e-5] claim." Id. at 26. "In other words, the court assume[d] without deciding that this is a sexual harassment pattern or practice case." Id. The court canvassed the summary judgment record and held, as a matter of law, that the EEOC had presented the court with insufficient admissible evidence for a reasonable jury to find that CRST has engaged in a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment.

The pivotal issue before the court, then, is whether Title VII's statute of limitations, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(e)(1), applies when the EEOC brings suit in its own name on behalf of a group of allegedly aggrieved persons under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5 and there is insufficient evidence of a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination. The EEOC's entire Resistance is premised upon the proposition that it is immune from § 2000e-5's statute of limitations in this case because it has a viable pattern or practice claim against CRST. In other words, the EEOC assumes that its pattern or practice allegations provide the requisite legal justification to revive these otherwise stale claims; the EEOC apparently assumes that, absent a showing of a pattern or practice of employment discrimination, § 2000e-5 bars the EEOC from seeking relief on behalf of the twelve women.

In light of the court's ruling on the Pattern or Practice Motion, the EEOC's fundamental premise that it has a viable pattern or practice claim against CRST is false. For this reason, the court shall grant the Motion as to the twelve women as unresisted. The EEOC has not cited any controlling legal authority that indicates it is not bound by any statute of limitations when pursuing relief on behalf of a group of allegedly aggrieved persons under § 2000e-5 absent a showing of a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination. The Ledbetter Act has no relevance here. Congress enacted the Ledbetter Act "to clarify that a discriminatory compensation decision or other practice . . . . occurs each time compensation is paid to the discriminatory compensation decision or other practice[.]" 123 Stat. at 5. There is no indication Congress intended the Ledbetter Act to serve as a trump card that the EEOC might use to supersede all statutes of limitations in our nation's various civil rights acts.

In sum, the court holds that the EEOC is barred from seeking relief at trial on behalf of the twelve women insofar as they allege that they were sexually harassed before February 4, 2005.[4] The court need not reach CRST's argument concerning the appropriateness of a discovery sanction. Although CRST presents the court with legal reasons to bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Shadden and Skaggs insofar as they allege that they were sexually harassed on or after February

4. There is one exception to this bright-line ruling. As explained in Part IV.B.2.b.i infra, CRST does not ask the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief on Ms. Carney's behalf for her allegation that Mr. Raymond Coplan sexually harassed her in early 2005. CRST assumes Morgan's continuing violation doctrine saves this portion of Ms. Carney's claim.

4, 2005, the court shall deny this portion of the Motion without prejudice. The court finds it more appropriate to consider this portion of the Motion in conjunction with CRST's pending motions for summary judgment on the merits of the various allegedly aggrieved persons' claims.

Accordingly, the court shall grant in part and deny in part the Motion.

2. Alternate holding

Even if the court did not deem the Motion to be unresisted, the court would nonetheless bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of the twelve women insofar as they allege that they were sexually harassed before February 4, 2005. It is the opinion of the court that (1) the EEOC generally may not resurrect dead claims and (2) the continuing violation doctrine largely does not apply in this case.

a. The EEOC generally may not resurrect dead claims

The Supreme Court has not directly addressed whether Title VII's statute of limitations binds the EEOC, and the circuit courts of appeals are silent.[5] Matters are

5. The Supreme Court reserved ruling on a related issue. See Morgan, 536 U.S. at 115 n.9 ("We have no occasion here to consider the timely filing question with respect to 'pattern-or-practice' claims brought by private litigants as none are at issue here."); see also Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 824 F. Supp. 847, 878 (D. Minn. 1993) ("If Plaintiffs establish that Eveleth

Scolari Warehouse Mkts., Inc.*, 488 F. Supp. 2d 1117, 1143 (D. Nev. 2007). As a consequence, such district courts offer widely divergent analyses that are impossible to reconcile or even tidily summarize. All that may be said is that, whereas some district courts appear to indicate the EEOC may be subject to a statute of limitations, see, e.g., EEOC v. Burlington Med. Supplies, Inc., 536 F. Supp. 2d 647, 659-60 (E.D. Va. 2008); EEOC v. Wyndham Worldwide Corp., No. C07-1531RSM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83558, 2008 WL 4527974, *6-*8 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 3, 2008); *EEOC v. to grant the EEOC the power to resurrect stale claims, see, e.g., EEOC v. Ceisel Masonry, Inc., 594 F. Supp. 2d 1018, 1022 (N.D. Ill. 2009); EEOC v. Worthington, Moore & Jacobs, Inc., 582 F. Supp. 2d 731, 737-38 (D. Md. 2008); United States EEOC v. Scolari Warehouse Mkts., Inc., 488 F. Supp. 2d 1117, 1136 (D. Nev. 2007); EEOC v. L.A. Weight Loss, 509 F. Supp. 2d 527, 534-36 (D. Md. 2007); EEOC v. Dial Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d 926, 966-69 (N.D. Ill. 2001); EEOC v. Mitsubishi Motor Mfg. of Am., Inc., 990 F. Supp. 1059, 1083-88 (C.D. Ill. 1998).

After surveying these district court cases, the court finds the better reasoned authority holds that Title VII generally does not grant the EEOC the power to resurrect otherwise stale claims of unlawful employment discrimination.[6] The plain language of § 2000e-5 contemplates that the "charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred[.]" 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(e)(1) (emphasis added). Section 2000e-5 makes no exception for the EEOC, even though it clearly contemplates EEOC enforcement actions. Any ambiguity in the statute is the consequence of early judicial decisions, which granted the EEOC the ability to use an individual charge of discrimination as "a jurisdictional springboard"

6. For example, Ceisel reasoned EEOC v. Sidley Austin LLP, 437 F.3d 695 (7th Cir. 2006) called into question Custom and Walner. Ceisel reads too much into Sidley, which simply applied Waffle House and held that an individual's failure to file a timely charge of discrimination does not, by itself, prevent the EEOC from seeking monetary relief on her behalf. 437 F.3d at 696. Sidley did not address the limitations issue presented here.

but failed to discuss the statute of limitations problems that might arise if courts were to allow the EEOC to recover for non-charging parties with stale claims. See, e.g., Gen. Elec., 532 F.2d at 364 (cited with approval in Gen. Tel., 446 U.S. at 331 ("Any violations that the EEOC ascertains in the course of a reasonable investigation of the charging party's complaint are actionable.")).

The EEOC's proposed construction of its powers is inconsistent with its statutory mandate. The district court in Burlington aptly observed:

> The EEOC's special statutory mandate does not entitle it to "expand substantive rights, such as reviving stale claims" that would not otherwise be actionable under Title VII. On the contrary, the EEOC's ability to secure enforcement of Title VII on behalf of the public is primarily served through its ability to secure injunctive relief, not bootstrapping individual damage claims into the EEOC's enforcement action.

536 F. Supp. 2d at 659 (citation omitted); see also Bemis, 279 F.3d at 421 ("The EEOC's primary role is that of a law enforcement agency and it is merely a detail that it pays over any monetary relief obtained to the victims of the defendant's violation rather than pocketing the money itself and putting them to the bother of suing separately.")

To adopt the EEOC's construction of Title VII would permit the EEOC to destroy all principles of repose and force employers to defend against zombie-like claims from the distant past. As the district court in Sears recognized, the Supreme Court counseled against any such construction of § 2000e-5 in Occidental Life:

> The [Supreme] Court implied in dicta that, unlike the 180-day period of [§] 2000e-5(f)(1), the 180-day period of [§] 2000e-5(e) is intended to be a limitations period. [T]he Court went on to state:
> "Congress did express concern for the need of time limitations in the fair operation of the Act, but that concern was directed entirely to the initial filing of a charge with the EEOC and prompt notification thereafter to the alleged violator. The bills passed in both the House and the Senate contained short time periods within which charges were to be filed with the EEOC and notice given to the employer. And the debates and reports in both Houses made evident that the statute of limitations problem was perceived in terms of these provisions, rather than in terms of a later limitation on the EEOC's power to sue. That perception was reflected in the final version of the 1972 Act, which requires that a charge must be filed with the EEOC within 180 days of the alleged violation of Title VII . . . .
> "The fact that the only statute of limitations discussions in Congress were directed to the period preceding the filing of an initial charge is wholly consistent with the Act's > overall enforcement structure a sequential series of steps beginning with the filing of a charge with the EEOC. Within this procedural framework, the benchmark, for purposes of a statute of limitations, is not the last phase of the multistage scheme, but the commencement of the proceeding before the administrative body."

> While this Court is mindful of the fact that the Court possibly had in mind only a limitations period for charges filed by individuals, the message is clear that in Occidental Life the majority of the Court in dicta recognized the congressional intent that [§] 2000e-5(e) is an example of a statute of limitations period applicable to suits filed under [§] 2000e-5. This Court is of the opinion that said period is also applicable to suits initiated by the EEOC . . . .

Sears, 490 F. Supp. at 1260 (footnote omitted) (quoting Occidental Life, 432 U.S. at 371-72); see, e.g., Wyndham Worldwide, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83558, 2008 WL 4527974, at *6-*8 (applying statute of limitations to the EEOC and holding that the EEOC may not "resurrect[] stale claims" in absence of pattern or practice claim); GLC Rests., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78270, 2006 WL 3052224, at *2-*3 (similar).

b. The continuing violation doctrine is largely inapplicable

Morgan is largely inapplicable to the case at bar, because the EEOC has not presented evidence to show that "all acts which constitute [a] claim are part of the same unlawful employment practice and at least one act falls within the time period." 536 U.S. at 122. As previously indicated, "there is nothing in the record which a reasonable jury might cobble together to show [CRST's] failures were part of a pattern or a practice of tolerating sexual harassment instead of merely isolated or sporadic failures over the course of four (or perhaps twelve) years." Order (docket no. 197), at 62 (emphasis in original). At most, Morgan only applies in a limited respect as to the individual "claims" of harassment that the EEOC presses in this action. Morgan does not permit the EEOC to "use some [allegedly aggrieved persons'] timely charges to support other [allegedly aggrieved persons'] entirely untimely claims." GLC Rests., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78270, 2006 WL 3052224, at *2.

Therefore, Morgan certainly does not apply to the ability of the EEOC to seek relief at trial on behalf of nine women, Mss. Aguilar, Austin, Cohen, Howard, Leach, McCain, McCall, Perhealth, and Stephenson. None of these women allege any harassment on or after February 4, 2005. Ms. Aguilar alleges sexual harassment in 2004; Ms. Austin in 2001; Ms. McCain in 2003; Ms. Cohen in 2003 and 2004; Ms. Howard in 2004; Ms. Leach in 2004 and January of 2005; Ms. McCall in 2004; Ms. Perhealth in January of 2005; and Ms. Stephenson in 1999. Accordingly, the court must grant the Motion as to these nine women.

Appendix M

Matters are somewhat more complicated with respect to the remaining three women, Mss. Carney, Shadden and Skaggs. Each of these three women alleges she was sexually harassed before and after February 4, 2005. CRST asks the court to bar the EEOC from resurrecting that portion of each woman's "claim" occurring before such date; CRST does not move for summary judgment on limitations grounds for any conduct occurring on or after February 4, 2005. The court discusses each woman's allegations, in turn, and analyzes them under Morgan separately.

i. Ms. Carney

Ms. Carney worked for CRST from September of 2004 to April of 2005, when she quit and went to work for Swift, Inc. She returned to CRST from June 15, 2005 to June 30, 2005. She left CRST on June 30, 2005 after entering a hospital for "pregnancy related issues." Def.'s Statement of Undisputed Material Facts at 114. Ms. Carney alleges she was sexually harassed by three men while she worked for CRST during these two stints: Messrs. Joe McCarthy, Raymond Coplan and Chris Evans.

Ms. Carney alleges her trainer Mr. McCarthy harassed her in late 2004 by promising to promote her to co-driver status and pay for many of her expenses if she had sexual relations with him. Ms. Carney and Mr. McCarthy had sexual relations on a daily basis in the cab of the semi-truck they shared. Ms. Carney also spent a week with Mr. McCarthy at his home in Boston, Massachusetts and repeatedly had sex and dinner with him.

Appendix M

Ms. Carney alleges Mr. Evans harassed her in late 2004. Mr. Evans was paired with her as a co-driver. He did not offer her money for sex. He would rub her shoulders, ask her why she would not have sex with an older man and told her he could "rock [her] world." Def.'s App'x at 627.

Ms. Carney alleges Mr. Coplan harassed her for a period of a month, apparently before and after February 4, 2005. When Mr. Coplan first boarded the truck, he told Ms. Carney: "Watch, I'm going to fuck you." Id. at 623. On their second night in the truck, he insisted that she sleep in his bed and, if she did not, he would leave her on the side of the road. That night and every night thereafter for the next month Mr. Coplan held Ms. Carney down and raped her. He threatened to kill her if she told CRST about his behavior.

CRST only moves for summary judgment with respect to Ms. Carney's allegations of sexual harassment against Messrs. McCarthy and Evans. CRST does not move for summary judgment with respect to Ms. Carney's allegations of sexual harassment against Mr. Coplan, because she alleges he continuously sexually harassed her before and after February 4, 2005.

Applying Morgan, the court agrees with CRST's analysis. There is no discernible connection between the harassment of Ms. Carney by Messrs. McCarthy and Evans, on the one hand, and the harassment of Ms. Carney by Mr. Coplan, on the other. In other words, there is no evidence the actions of the three men were all "part of the same unlawful employment practice." 536 U.S. at 122. Each of the three sets of allegations by Ms. Carney involves different alleged harassers, different workplaces and different circumstances. At most, the EEOC has shown anecdotal, isolated discriminatory events. Cf. Tademe v. St. Cloud State Univ., 328 F.3d 982, 988-89 & n.4 (8th Cir. 2003) (applying Morgan and concluding that allegations were "entirely anecdotal and at best shows isolated discriminatory events" not a pattern or practice of discrimination or anything else that might fall within the ambit of the continuing violation doctrine) (citing in part EEOC v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 191 F.3d 948, 952-53 (8th Cir. 1999) (affirming dismissal of a pattern or practice claim under the federal age discrimination act because the EEOC proved nothing more than anecdotal discriminatory acts)); Wyndham Worldwide, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83558, 2008 WL 4527974, at *6-*8 (declining to apply Morgan across allegedly aggrieved persons); GLC Rests., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78270, 2006 WL 3052224, at *2-*3 (similar).

Accordingly, the court shall grant the Motion as to Ms. Carney. The EEOC may seek relief for Ms. Carney only insofar as she alleges she was sexually harassed by Mr. Coplan. The court expresses no view as to whether harassment by Messrs. McCarthy and Evans is admissible at trial.

ii. Ms. Shadden

Ms. Shadden worked for CRST from October of 2004 through December of 2004. She was rehired in May of 2006 and presently works for CRST. Ms. Shadden worked for a number of other companies before CRST rehired her.

Appendix M

Ms. Shadden claims an unnamed co-driver sexually harassed her in 2004. He "was very abusive in a sexual way," engaged in "sex talk," asked her if she "had . . . ever experienced a sexual relationship or any other type of relationship with a black man," put his hand on her thigh and touched her in her "bra area." Def.'s App'x at 2596-97.

Ms. Shadden also alleges that, after she returned to CRST in 2006, she endured repeated sexual advances. Three other drivers "hit on [her] once." Id. at 2602. Ms. Shadden also claims Mr. Carl Bowling, a student driver whom she was training, sexually harassed her in late April and early May of 2007. She alleges Mr. Bowling asked her to pretend to be his girlfriend around other men, asked her if she would get into bed with him and, on one occasion, jumped into her bed and refused to leave. Mr. Bowling frightened Ms. Shadden because of his persistence and his laughter. Also, his conduct grew more aggressive over time.

CRST does not move for summary judgment on limitations grounds with respect to the post-February 4, 2005 conduct of Mr. Bowling and the three other men. CRST only moves for summary judgment with respect to Ms. Shadden's allegations of sexual harassment against the unnamed co-driver in 2004.

Applying Morgan, the court agrees with CRST's analysis. There is no discernible connection between the harassment of Ms. Shadden by the unnamed co-driver, on the one hand, and the harassment of Ms. Shadden by Mr. Bowling and the other three men on the other. In other words, there is no evidence the actions were all "part of the same unlawful employment practice." Morgan, 536 U.S. at 122. Each of the two sets of allegations by Ms. Carney involves different alleged harassers, different workplaces and different circumstances. At most, the EEOC has shown anecdotal, isolated discriminatory events. Cf. Tademe, 328 F.3d at 988-89 & n.4; Wyndham Worldwide, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83558, 2008 WL 4527974, at *6-*8 (declining to apply Morgan across allegedly aggrieved persons); GLC Rests., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78270, 2006 WL 3052224, at *2-*3 (similar).

Accordingly, the court shall grant the Motion in part as to Ms. Shadden. The EEOC may seek relief for Ms. Shadden only insofar as she alleges she was sexually harassed by Mr. Bowling and the three other men. The court expresses no view as to whether harassment by the unnamed co-driver is inadmissible at trial.

iii. Ms. Skaggs

Ms. Skaggs worked at CRST from February of 2003 through May of 2005. Ms. Skaggs alleges her first trainer, Mr. Dartmouth Robinson, and her last co-driver, Mr. Eules "J" Baker, Jr., sexually harassed her.

Ms. Skaggs drove with Mr. Robinson on one day on February 21, 2003. She claims Mr. Robinson told Ms. Skaggs she could sleep in the nude if she wanted or could sit with him up front nude if she liked. He mentioned that other female drivers would take their shirts off and flash other drivers.

Appendix M

Ms. Skaggs rode with Mr. Baker for three weeks between March 31, 2005 and April 17, 2005. Mr. Baker bragged about his sexual prowess and experiences, made perverted comments on a daily basis and he propositioned her for sex five times. He bragged he could "fuck [her] brains out" and "make [her] have more than one orgasms [sic], more than anybody else [she had] ever known." Def.'s App'x at 2868. He also offered to pay her for $ 100 to have sex with him in Reno, Nevada.

CRST only moves for summary judgment with respect to Ms. Skaggs's allegations of sexual harassment against Mr. Robinson. CRST does not move for summary judgment on limitations grounds with respect to Ms. Skaggs's allegations of sexual harassment against Mr. Baker, because she alleges he sexually harassed her after February 4, 2005.

Applying Morgan, the court agrees with CRST's analysis. There is no discernible connection between the harassment of Ms. Skaggs by Mr. Robinson, on the one hand, and the harassment of Ms. Skaggs by Mr. Baker, on the other. In other words, there is no evidence the actions of the two men were all "part of the same unlawful employment practice." 536 U.S. at 122. The two instances of sexual harassment involve different alleged harassers, different workplaces and different circumstances. At most, the EEOC has shown anecdotal, isolated discriminatory events. Cf. Tademe, 328 F.3d at 988-89 & n.4; Wyndham Worldwide, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83558, 2008 WL 4527974, at *6-*8 (declining to apply Morgan across allegedly aggrieved persons); GLC Rests., 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78270, 2006 WL 3052224, at *2-*3 (similar).

Accordingly, the court shall grant the Motion in part as to Ms. Skaggs. The EEOC may seek relief for Ms. Skaggs only insofar as she alleges she was sexually harassed by Mr. Baker. The court expresses no view as to whether harassment by Mr. Robinson is inadmissible evidence at trial.

C. Disposition as to the Twelve Women

In sum, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking any legal relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Aguilar, Austin, Cohen, Howard, Leach, McCain, McCall, Perhealth and Stephenson. Furthermore, the court shall bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Carney, Shadden and Skaggs insofar as they allege they were sexually harassed before February 4, 2005, except that the EEOC may seek relief at trial on behalf of Ms. Carney for any alleged sexual harassment suffered at the hands of Mr. Coplan.

The court shall deny the Motion in all other respects. The court shall consider CRST's alternative arguments for dismissal with respect to Mss. Shadden and Skaggs in conjunction with CRST's pending motions for summary judgment on the merits of the allegedly aggrieved persons' allegations of sexual harassment.

Appendix M

V. MS. BEDFORD

A. Arguments

In its Motion, CRST also asks the court to bar the EEOC from seeking relief for a thirteenth woman, Ms. Belinda Bedford. Ms. Bedford is not similarly situated to the other twelve women in the Motion, however, because all of her allegations of sexual harassment occurred after February 4, 2005. Ms. Bedford worked for CRST from July 19, 2007 through August 11, 2007. She alleges Mr. Steve Hall, a fellow driver, sexually harassed her for approximately one week. On August 12, 2007, Ms. Bedford filed a timely charge of discrimination with the EEOC. The EEOC dismissed the charge and issued her a right-to-sue letter on December 27, 2007.

In the Motion, CRST claims that Ms. Bedford did not file suit within ninety days of the issuance of her right-to-sue letter or intervene in the instant lawsuit. CRST concludes the EEOC is barred from seeking relief for her. In the alternative, CRST claims Ms. Bedford's claim must fail on its merits because she did not promptly report the alleged sexual harassment to CRST.

In its Resistance, EEOC points out Ms. Bedford's "claim was apparently included in this motion in error" because she clearly alleges she was sexually harassed after February 4, 2005. Resistance at 14. The EEOC also claims CRST is wrong about the facts; the EEOC presents evidence to show Ms. Bedford filed a Title VII suit against CRST in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma on March 26, 2008 ("the Oklahoma suit"). The EEOC notes Ms. Bedford voluntarily dismissed the Oklahoma suit on July 23, 2008 with intent to proceed in the instant action as a "class member." Addressing CRST's alternative argument, the EEOC argues Ms. Bedford was not required to report her harassment sooner than she did.

In Reply, CRST repeats the arguments in its Motion but admits the EEOC's factual allegations about the Oklahoma suit. CRST maintains the EEOC may not seek relief on behalf of Ms. Bedford at trial. CRST opines Ms. Bedford should have asked for leave to intervene in the instant lawsuit instead of voluntarily dismissing the Oklahoma suit without prejudice.

In Surreply, the EEOC presents the court with an affidavit from Ms. Bedford's attorney in the Oklahoma suit, Attorney Amanda Farahany. Attorney Farahany states she advised Ms. Bedford to voluntarily dismiss her case because the EEOC could seek relief on her behalf in the instant case. Attorney Farahany maintains the voluntary dismissal of the Oklahoma suit was not intended as a waiver of Ms. Bedford's rights.

B. Analysis

Neither party cites any cases precisely on point. CRST cites four cases in support of its position that Ms. Bedford's actions bar the EEOC from seeking relief on her behalf in this case. All four cases are distinguishable, however, and have nothing to do with the issue before the court. See, e.g., South Dakota v. United States DOI, 317 F.3d 783, 785 (8th Cir. 2003) (generally discussing rules of intervention); Price Digital Equip. Co., 846 F.2d 1026, 1027 (5th Cir. 1998) (generally discussing the effect of a voluntary dismissal); Brown v. Hartshorne Public School Dist. #1, 926 F.2d 959, 961 (10th Cir. 1991) (same). Indeed, the closest governing authority on point would appear to run counter to CRST's position. Cf. Anderson v. Unisys Corp., 47 F.3d 302, 308 (8th Cir. 1995) (holding that any claimant who files an administrative charge and obtains a right-to-sue letter from the EEOC must file a timely lawsuit to preserve her cause of action). Absent citation to legal authority on point, the court declines to bar the EEOC from seeking relief for Ms. Bedford because she filed a lawsuit and dismissed it voluntarily to allow the EEOC to seek relief on her behalf. See LR 56.b; LR 7.e; LR 1.f.

Accordingly, the court shall deny the motion in part with respect to Ms. Bedford. The court shall consider CRST's alternative arguments for dismissal with respect to Ms. Bedford in conjunction with CRST's pending motions for summary judgment on the merits of the allegedly aggrieved persons' allegations of sexual harassment.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 147) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART. The court BARS the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of (1) Ms. Antonia Aguilar, (2) Ms. Linda Austin, (3) Ms. Patrice Cohen, (4)

Ms. Catherine Howard, (5) Ms. Geraldine Leach, (6) Ms. Margaret McCain, (7) Ms. Karen McCall, (8) Ms. Rachel Perhealth, and (9) Ms. Priscilla Stephenson. Furthermore, the court BARS the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of (1) Ms. Kelli Carney, (2) Ms. Faith Shadden and (3) Ms. Linda Skaggs insofar as they allege they were sexually harassed before February 4, 2005, except that the EEOC may seek relief at trial on behalf of Ms. Carney for any alleged sexual harassment suffered at the hands of Mr. Coplan. The court shall rule on CRST's alternative arguments to bar the EEOC from seeking relief at trial on behalf of Mss. Bedford, Shadden and Skaggs when it rules on CRST's pending motions for summary judgment on the merits of the allegedly aggrieved persons' allegations of sexual harassment. The EEOC is ordered to file an updated list of allegedly aggrieved persons for which it intends to seek relief at trial on or before May 12, 2009, at 5 p.m. See Order (docket no. 66), passim.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

EEOC'S RESISTANCE TO CRST'S MOTIONS IN LIMINE

Appendix N

The Court has now dismissed EEOC's pattern or practice claim. April 30, 2009 Order, Doc. No. 197. EEOC will therefore present separate claims for each of the 35 women against whom CRST has not moved for summary judgment, and for each of the remaining women whose claims are not dismissed pursuant to CRST's motions. The burdens of proof will be different than if EEOC were arguing a pattern or practice claim, but the evidence will be substantially similar. EEOC will be required to prove for each woman that she was subjected to sexually offensive conduct, which she found unwelcome, because of her sex. EEOC will also be required to prove that the conduct was severe or pervasive, that it would have offended a reasonable person, and that Defendant CRST failed to take prompt and effective action to end the harassment. See Eighth Circuit Pattern Jury Instruction 5.43. Evidence will include the totality of the hostile environment to which each woman was subjected, Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 23 (1993), and the effectiveness of CRST's policies in preventing and redressing such harassment.[1]

Section I below discusses the case law in regard to motions in limine and argues that many sections of CRST's

EEOC will therefore make its arguments here as briefly as possible.

[TABLE OF CONTENTS INTENTIONALLY OMITTED]

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc.'s "Motion for Summary Judgment on EEOC's Pattern and Practice Claim" ("Motion") (docket no. 150).

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

A. Administrative Proceedings

1. Ms. Starke files the Charge

On December 1, 2005, Plaintiff-Intervener Monika Starke ("Ms. Starke") presented a Charge of Discrimination ("Charge") to Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("the EEOC"). Ms. Starke alleged that her employer, Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST"), "discriminated against [her] on the basis of . . . sex . . . , in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.,] as amended" ("Title VII").

Def.'s App'x at 2998. Ms. Starke alleged the following "particulars" in her Charge:

> I was hired by [CRST] on June 22, 2005 in the position of Truck Driver. Since my employment began with [CRST,] I have been subjected to sexual harassment on two occasions by my Lead Trainers. On July 7, 2005, Bob Smith, Lead Trainer[,] began to make sexual remarks to me whenever he gave me instructions. . . . On July 14, 2005, I contacted the dispatcher and was told that I could not get off the truck until the next day. On July 18, 2005 through August 3, 2005, David Goodman, Lead Trainer, forced me to have unwanted sex with him on several occasions while we were traveling in order to get a passing grade.

Id. Further, Ms. Starke alleged that CRST "did not state why I was subjected to sexual harassment[,] which created a hostile work environment." Id.

2. The EEOC processes the Charge

Ms. Starke asked the EEOC to file her Charge and cross-file it with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission ("ICRC"). Pursuant to a work-sharing agreement, the EEOC formally received the Charge on behalf of both agencies and deemed the Charge to be "initially instituted" with the ICRC. (In the work-sharing agreement, the EEOC and ICRC reciprocally designated each other as agents for receiving charges of unlawful employment practices.) The EEOC sent a copy of the Charge to the ICRC, notified the ICRC that the Charge "is to be initially investigated by the EEOC," id. at 3000, and began its investigation.[1]

Because the EEOC deemed the Charge to be "initially instituted" with the ICRC, Ms. Starke's Charge was timely filed as to any alleged unlawful employment practice occurring on or after February 4, 2005, i.e., any such practice occurring within 300 days of the filing of the Charge. In relevant part, Title VII's statute of limitations provides:

> A charge under this section shall be filed within one hundred and eighty days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred . . . , except that in a case of an unlawful employment practice with respect to which the person aggrieved has initially instituted proceedings with a State . . . with authority to grant or seek relief from such practice . . . , such charge shall be filed by or on behalf of the person aggrieved within three hundred days after the alleged unlawful employment practice occurred . . . .

1. The ICRC waived its right to exclusive jurisdiction over charges initially instituted with it. For further explanation of the work-sharing agreement, see Millage v. City of Sioux City, 258 F. Supp. 2d 976, 985-86 (N.D. Iowa 2003) (Bennett, C.J.). Here, the ICRC filed the Charge on December 5, 2005 but apparently stayed its own investigation pending the EEOC proceedings.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(e)(1); see, e.g., Occidental Life Ins. Co. of Cal. v. EEOC, 432 U.S. 355, 360 n.8, 97 S. Ct. 2447, 53 L. Ed. 2d 402 (1977) ("If a charge has been initially filed with or referred to a state . . . agency, it must be filed with the EEOC within 300 days after the practice occurred . . . ."). An influential treatise explains

> there is a dual aspect to the Title VII limitations periods; they have a retrospective, as well as a prospective, aspect. In other words, not only must charges be filed within 180 (or 300) days after a discriminatory event, but also, as a general rule, the aggrieved party can only achieve redress for discriminatory acts which occurred 180 (or 300) days prior to the filing of charges.

4 Lex K. Larson, Employment Discrimination § 72.02, at 72-5 (2d ed. July 2008).

3. The EEOC's investigation

Upon receipt of the Charge, the EEOC immediately notified CRST of Ms. Starke's allegations. The EEOC ordered CRST to file a response to the Charge on or before December 30, 2005. The record does not disclose CRST's response to Ms. Starke's allegations.

The nature, scope and duration of the EEOC's investigation is unknown to the court. Further, it is unclear to what extent the EEOC attempted to conciliate

Ms. Starke's allegations with CRST.[2] What is certain is that Ms. Starke never exercised her right to file a Title VII lawsuit against CRST while her Charge was pending before the EEOC. Title VII grants the charging party who is unwilling to await the conclusion of extended EEOC proceedings a right to file suit 180 days after the charge was filed. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1); Occidental Life, 432 U.S. at 361.

B. The EEOC's Complaint

On September 27, 2007, nearly two years after Ms. Starke filed her Charge, the EEOC filed the instant lawsuit on behalf of Ms. Starke "and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] . . . ." Complaint (docket no. 2), at 1. Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3) and 42 U.S.C. § 1981a, the EEOC purports to bring suit in its own name "to correct [CRST's] unlawful employment practices on the basis of sex, and to provide appropriate relief to [Ms.] Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] who were adversely affected by such practices." First Amended Complaint ("EEOC's Complaint") (docket no. 8), at 1.[3] The EEOC

2. Title VII requires the EEOC to engage in "informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion" before filing suit. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(b). CRST does not complain that the EEOC failed to conciliate the allegations of Ms. Starke or anyone else. Cf. EEOC v. Dial Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d 926, 940 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (making clear the EEOC and the defendant conciliated claims of all "class" members).

3. The EEOC's Complaint, filed on November 16, 2007, corrected a typographical error in the Complaint. Ruling (docket no. 31), at 1 n.1.

generally alleges that Ms. Starke and the other similarly situated women "were adversely affected . . . when their lead drivers or team drivers subjected them to sexual harassment and to a sexually hostile working environment based on their gender, and CRST failed to prevent, correct, and protect them . . . ." Id.

The heart of the EEOC's Complaint contains the following specific allegations against CRST:

> 7. Since at least July 2005, CRST engaged in unlawful employment practices in violation of Sections 703(a) and 704(a) of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2 and 2000e-3. Among other things, two of its lead drivers subjected [Ms.] Starke to sexual harassment during their supervision of [her] (including, but not limited to, unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments), which further created a sexually hostile and offensive work environment. CRST is liable for the harm caused by the harassment and the hostile and offensive work environment because of the actions of its lead drivers and because of its failure and refusal to take prompt and appropriate action to prevent, correct, and protect [Ms.] Starke from the harassment and the hostile work environment, culminating in her discharge from employment with CRST.
> 8. Other similarly situated female employees of CRST were also subjected to sexual harassment > and a sexually hostile and offensive work environment while working for CRST, including, among other things, unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments from their lead drivers or team drivers. CRST is liable for harm caused by the harassment and the hostile and offensive work environment because of the actions of its lead drivers or team drivers and because of its failure and refusal to take prompt and appropriate action to prevent, correct, and protect its female employees from the harassment and the hostile environment.

> 9. The effect of the practices complained of in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above has been to deprive [Ms.] Starke and class of similarly situated female employees of equal employment opportunities, and to otherwise adversely affect their status as employees, because of sex.

EEOC's Complaint at 2-3. The EEOC alleges that CRST's actions "were intentional" and "done with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of [Ms.] Starke and the class of similarly situated female employees." Id. at 3.

The EEOC asks the court for "a permanent injunction enjoining CRST and its officers, successors, and assigns, and all persons in active concert or participation with them, from engaging in sexual harassment [and] any other employment practice which discriminates on the basis of sex." Id. at 4. The EEOC further asks the court to "[o]rder CRST to institute and carry out policies, practices, and programs which provide equal employment opportunities for women, and which eradicate the effects of its past and present unlawful employment practices." Id. Finally, the EEOC asks the court to order CRST to pay Ms. Starke and the similarly situated female employees compensatory damages, punitive damages and ordinary costs. The requested compensatory damages include back pay, pre-judgment interest, front pay and recompense for "emotional pain, suffering, and humiliation." Id.

Notably, the EEOC did not that allege CRST was engaged in "a pattern or practice" of illegal sex-based discrimination or otherwise plead a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6. Further, the EEOC's Complaint does not state with particularity how Ms. Starke or the other similarly situated women exhausted their administrative remedies. The EEOC simply represents that, "[m]ore than 30 days prior to the institution of [the] lawsuit, [Ms. Starke], then a CRST employee, filed a charge with the EEOC alleging violations of Title VII by CRST." Id. Similarly, it is unclear why the EEOC used Ms. Starke's Charge to file this lawsuit on behalf of an untold number of similarly situated women--all of whom remain unnamed in the EEOC's Complaint. In other words, it is unknown what led the EEOC to use the Charge as "a jurisdictional springboard." EEOC v. Gen. Elec. Co., 532 F.2d 359, 364 (4th Cir. 1976) (cited with approval in Gen. Tel. Co. of Nw., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 331, 100 S. Ct. 1698, 64 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1980) ("Any violations that the EEOC ascertains in the course of a reasonable investigation of the charging party's complaint are actionable.")).

Appendix O

On November 30, 2007, CRST filed an Answer and Affirmative Defenses (docket no. 11). On May 1, 2008, CRST filed an Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses ("Answer") (docket no. 36) to assert an additional affirmative defense. CRST denies the substance of the EEOC's Complaint and asserts seven affirmative defenses, including but not limited to waiver or release, failure to exhaust administrative remedies and "untimel[iness]." Answer at 2.

C. Scheduling

On February 8, 2008, the court adopted the parties' Scheduling Order and Discovery Plan ("Scheduling Order") (docket no. 21). Among other things, the parties agreed to a December 7, 2008 deadline for completion of discovery and a trial ready date of May 15, 2009. The parties estimated trial would last twenty days. In reliance upon the parties' representations, the court scheduled the trial to commence at some time "during the two-week period beginning on June 15, 2009" with the exact dates and times of the trial to be determined closer in time to the trial date. Trial Management Order (docket no. 22), at 1 (emphasis omitted).

D. Other Allegedly Aggrieved Persons

1. Unnecessary confusion

The vague reference in the EEOC's Complaint to "[Ms.] Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees" has added unnecessary confusion to this case in at least two respects:

First, the EEOC's use of the phrase "[Ms.] Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees" does not comport with the language or structure of the statute upon which it sued, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5. The phrase naturally evokes the thought of Ms. Starke as the named plaintiff in a Rule 23 class action against CRST. To the contrary, it is settled that "the EEOC may maintain its [§ 2000e-5(f)(1)] civil actions for the enforcement of Title VII and may seek specific relief for a group of aggrieved individuals without first obtaining class certification pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23." Gen. Tel., 446 U.S. at 333-34 (footnote omitted). For example, the EEOC may pursue relief on behalf of a group of allegedly aggrieved persons "even though competing interests are involved," id. at 331, or even if there is "a huge variance in the nature and extent of the injuries suffered" within such group, In re Bemis Co., 279 F.3d 419, 421 (7th Cir. 2002) (Posner, J.). Any limitation upon the EEOC to sue only on behalf of "similarly situated female employees" in this case was self-imposed.

To remedy any confusion on this point, the court refers to the "similarly situated female employees" exactly as the relevant part of Title VII refers to them: as "allegedly aggrieved persons." See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) (referring to "[t]he person or persons aggrieved" and "the person aggrieved"). The court refrains from referring to the "similarly situated female employees" as "class members." See, e.g., EEOC v. Scolari Warehouse Mkts., Inc., 488 F. Supp. 2d 1117, 1124 n.2 (D. Nev. 2007) (declining to refer to allegedly aggrieved persons as "class members"); see also Gen. Tel., 446 U.S. at 323 n.5 (noting the EEOC refrained from characterizing a 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5 lawsuit as a "class action" and instead called it an action "affecting a class of individuals"). But see EEOC v. Int'l Profit Assocs., Inc., No. 01-C-4427, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069, *1 n.1 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 23, 2007) (using term "class"); EEOC v. Dial Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d 926, 946 n.13 (N.D. Ill. 2001) (similar); EEOC v. Mitsubishi Motor Mfg. of Am., Inc., 990 F. Supp. 1059, 1076 n.10 (C.D. Ill. 1998) (similar).

Second, in the early stages of this litigation it was unclear how many "similarly situated female employees" on whose behalf the EEOC was seeking individual relief.[4] The EEOC's Complaint does not indicate whether there were two, twenty or two thousand "similarly situated female employees."[5] The EEOC had agreed, however, to the Scheduling Order, which "[e]stimated [the] length of trial" to be "20 days." Scheduling Order at 2 (emphasis in original). The court accepted this representation when planning its schedule.

4. On September 26 and December 8, 2008, the court granted Mss. Starke, Janet Boot, Barbara Grant, Cindy Moffett, Remcey Jeunenne Peeples, Latesha Thomas and Nicole Ann Cinquemano ("Plaintiffs-Interveners") permission to intervene in the instant lawsuit, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24. Because Plaintiffs-Interveners did not respond to the Motion, the court does not discuss their claims in the instant Order.

5. While generality might be expected in a Rule 23 class-action complaint, the EEOC has a duty to investigate and conciliate allegations before filing suit on them under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5. See supra note 2 (discussing § 2000e-5(b)).

As discovery progressed, it became clear to the court that the EEOC did not know how many allegedly aggrieved persons for whom it was seeking relief and was using discovery to find them. On May 29, 2008, for example, the EEOC sent 2,000 letters to former CRST female employees to solicit their participation in this lawsuit. On September 28, 2008, the EEOC sent another 730 solicitation letters to former CRST female employees. CRST has produced more than 200,000 pages of documents to the EEOC in this case. Cf. Dial, 156 F. Supp. 2d at 938 (recounting but rejecting the defendant's argument that the EEOC had "made no effort to identify class members until several months after it filed the . . . action, when it sent a letter to approximately 400 current and former female employees").

There was a risk this case would drag on for years as the EEOC conducted wide-ranging discovery and continued to identify allegedly aggrieved persons. The EEOC's litigation strategy was untenable: CRST faced a continuously moving target of allegedly aggrieved persons, the risk of never-ending discovery and indefinite continuance of trial.

2. Case management orders

On August 7, 2008, the EEOC filed a Motion to Modify the Scheduling Order (docket no. 37). On August 8, 2008, CRST filed a Response (docket no. 38), in which it agreed certain modifications to the Scheduling Order were appropriate but also asked the court to establish a date "by which [the] EEOC completes its identification of class members." Response (docket no. 38), at 4. In a Reply (docket no. 42), the EEOC stated that it had identified "a total of 49 class members so far," predicted the "total class will reach between 100 and 150 individuals," indicated it believed it could identify "the bulk of the class members" by October 15, 2008, and suggested a December 7, 2008 deadline for identifying the "class members." Reply (docket no. 42), at 1-3.

On August 20, 2008, United States Magistrate Judge Jon S. Scoles issued an Order Modifying Discovery Plan (docket no. 44). Among other things, Judge Scoles set a October 15, 2008 deadline for the EEOC "to disclose the identity of class members." Order Modifying Discovery Plan (docket no. 44), at 2. Judge Scoles also continued the parties' previously agreed-upon discovery deadline to January 15, 2009. As far as the court is aware, CRST has consistently intended to exercise its right to depose all allegedly aggrieved persons on whose behalf the EEOC seeks monetary damages.

By October 15, 2008, the EEOC had identified approximately 270 aggrieved persons to CRST. This total was much greater than CRST had anticipated based upon the EEOC's representations to the court. See, e.g., Response (docket no. 42), at 1-2 (estimating "the total class will reach between 100 and 150 individuals"); Scheduling Order at 2 (estimating a twenty-day trial).

On November 6, 2008, CRST filed a "Motion under Rule 16(f) for an Order to Show Cause Concerning the EEOC's Identification of Class Members" ("Motion to Show Cause") (docket no. 56). CRST alleged that the EEOC did not have a good-faith basis for naming so many allegedly aggrieved persons; CRST accused the EEOC of adopting a policy of "naming everyone and asking questions later" just before the October 15, 2008 deadline. Brief in Support of Motion to Show Cause (docket no. 56-2), at 10. CRST alleged that the EEOC had simply added a large number of names found in CRST's human resources files without ever speaking to those individuals. Further, the EEOC had indicated to CRST that it reserved unto itself the option in the future "to remove some women from this list at a later date." Id. at 11.

In ruling upon the Motion to Show Cause, the undersigned held that the EEOC had complied with the letter, if not the spirit, of Judge Scoles's order. The court took the EEOC at its word that it had a good-faith belief that each and every one of the approximately 270 women it had disclosed to CRST before the deadline had an actionable claim for sex discrimination. Recognizing that the EEOC is "the master of its own case" (in the sense that it has the statutory authority to proceed on behalf of allegedly aggrieved persons without their consent), EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 291, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002), the court declined to "strike" all women who had not given the EEOC informed consent to proceed on their behalf in this case. The court expressed concern, however, that "CRST [still] might unfairly face a 'moving target' of prospective plaintiffs as discovery winds down and trial approaches." Order (docket no. 66), at 8.

Appendix O

The court invoked its inherent case management authority, Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f), Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b) and LR 16, and adopted the following three rules going forward to forestall any prejudice to CRST. The court ordered the EEOC to (1) immediately file with the court a corrected list of the approximately 270 allegedly aggrieved persons it had disclosed to CRST on October 15, 2008 (the list the EEOC previously disclosed contained many errors); (2) immediately inform CRST and file an amended disclosure list with the court as soon as it learned that it no longer wished to pursue individual claims on behalf of any of the women on the list; and (3) make all allegedly aggrieved persons on whose behalf the EEOC sought relief available to CRST for a deposition before the conclusion of discovery on January 15, 2009. The court then ordered: "If the EEOC fails to make a woman available, as a discovery sanction the court will not permit her to testify at trial and will bar the EEOC from seeking relief on her behalf in this case." Id. at 9.

Subsequently, the EEOC made approximately 150 of the 270 allegedly aggrieved women available for deposition. It appears CRST deposed all of the women whom the EEOC made available. At present, therefore, the EEOC intends to seek individual relief for approximately 150 allegedly aggrieved persons at trial. The EEOC desires to seek individual relief for an additional "99 women who were not deposed and therefore are subject to the discovery sanction." Response to Motion to Strike (docket no. 187), at 2. Because the EEOC did not make these women available to CRST for deposition prior to January 15, 2009, the EEOC may not seek relief for them.

E. Motion

On February 13, 2009, CRST filed the Motion. CRST asks the court to "grant summary judgment in its favor against [the] EEOC on the pattern or practice claim." Defendant's Brief in Support of Motion ("Def.'s Br.") (docket no. 150-2), at 21. On March 16, 2009, the EEOC filed a Resistance (docket no. 168). On March 31, 2009, CRST filed a Reply (docket no. 185). On April 21, 2009, with permission of the court, CRST filed a Surreply (docket no. 194).[6]

6. The EEOC's resistance materials contained numerous typographical errors. On April 13, 2009, the court ordered the EEOC to correct them but explicitly cautioned: "Plaintiff may only correct its prior typographical and technical errors. Plaintiff is not permitted to change any aspect of its arguments in connection with pending motions or any other substantive aspect of its filings. Order (docket no. 190), at 2 (emphasis in original). The EEOC violated the court's order. The EEOC did not merely correct its typographical and technical errors but instead elaborated upon and changed various substantive aspects of its responses to CRST's statements of individual material fact. Compare, e.g., Response to Statement of Material Facts Nos. 10 & 19 (docket no. 168-2), with Corrected Response to Statement of Material Facts Nos. 10 & 19 (docket no. 168-4). In a more limited respect it also perpetuated its prior failure to comply with the Local Rules. See, e.g., Corrected Response to Statement of Material Facts No. 19 (citing "P/P App. at 1-1386," its entire appendix, to refute CRST's assertions that (1) CRST's official policy prohibits sexual harassment and (2) CRST's officers and administrators all testified that CRST does not tolerate sexual harassment). However the EEOC may characterize its changes as a mere "rearrangement" of its previously submitted materials, at the very least the EEOC should have alerted the court before making such substantial revisions.

CRST requests oral argument on the Motion. The court finds oral argument is not appropriate. The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

III. STATUTORY FRAMEWORK

A brief outline of the relevant statutory framework helps to place the Motion in its proper context. At first glance the Motion is odd, because it asks the court to dismiss a "pattern or practice claim" when no such claim appears in the EEOC's Complaint.

A. Sexual Harassment is Sex Discrimination

Title VII makes it unlawful for an employer "to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's . . sex . . . ." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1). "The Supreme Court has determined . . . that sexual harassment 'sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the victim's employment and create an abusive working environment' qualifies as [unlawful] sex discrimination under Title VII." Adams v. O'Reilly Auto., Inc., 538 F.3d 926, 928 (8th Cir. 2008) (quoting Meritor Savs. Bank v. Vinson, 477 U.S. 57, 67, 106 S. Ct. 2399, 91 L. Ed. 2d 49 (1986)). In Meritor, the Supreme Court explained:

> The phrase "terms, conditions, or privileges of employment" [within 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1)] evinces a congressional intent to strike at the entire spectrum of disparate treatment of men and women in employment.

Appendix O

> [S]exual misconduct constitutes prohibited sexual harassment, whether or not it is directly linked to the grant or denial of an economic quid pro quo, where such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's work performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive working environment.
> Surely, a requirement that a man or woman run a gauntlet of sexual abuse in return for the privilege of being allowed to work and make a living can be as demeaning and disconcerting as the harshest of racial epithets.
> Of course . . . not all workplace conduct that may be described as "harassment" affects a "term, condition, or privilege" of employment within the meaning of Title VII. For sexual harassment to be actionable, it must be sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of [the victim's] employment and create an abusive working environment.

Appendix O

To prove sex discrimination based upon a hostile work environment theory of sexual harassment, then, a plaintiff must prove "(1) the plaintiff belongs to a protected group; (2) the plaintiff was subject to unwelcome harassment; (3) a causal nexus exists between the harassment and the plaintiff's protected group status; and (4) the harassment affected a term, condition, or privilege of employment." Gordon v. Shafer Contracting Co., 469 F.3d 1191, 1194-95 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Al-Zubaidy v. TEK Indus., Inc., 406 F.3d 1030, 1038 (8th Cir. 2005)). In addition, > if the harassment was committed by a co-worker, [a plaintiff] must . . . establish that [the employer] "knew or should have known of the conduct and failed to take proper remedial action." Dhyne v. Meiners Thriftway, Inc., 184 F.3d 983, 987 (8th Cir. 1999). On the other hand, if the harassment was committed by an employee who supervised [the plaintiff], [the employer] is vicariously liable for the harassment unless it can establish the affirmative defense defined in Burlington Indus., Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 765, 118 S. Ct. 2257, 141 L. Ed. 2d 633 (1998), and Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 807-08, 118 S. Ct. 2275, 141 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1998).

Joens v. John Morrell & Co., 354 F.3d 938, 940 (8th Cir. 2004). That is,

> [the employer] is vicariously liable for harassment by its supervisory personnel unless > it can establish that (1) [it] exercised reasonable care to prevent and promptly correct any harassing behavior; and (2) [the plaintiff] unreasonably failed to take advantage of the preventive or corrective opportunities provided by [the employer]. [Ellerth, 524 U.S. at 765]. An employer may assert the affirmative defense only "[w]hen no tangible employment action is taken." [Faragher, 524 U.S. at 807-08].

Gordon, 469 F.3d at 1195.

To prove sexual harassment is sufficiently unwelcome to be actionable under Title VII, a plaintiff must meet an objective standard and a subjective standard regarding the harassment itself. With respect to the objective standard, the Supreme Court has made clear over the years that "[c]onduct that is not severe or pervasive enough to create an objectively hostile or abusive work environment--an environment that a reasonable person would find hostile or abusive--is beyond Title VII's purview." Harris v. Forklift Sys., Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 21, 114 S. Ct. 367, 126 L. Ed. 2d 295 (1993). "Title VII does not mandate an employment environment worthy of a Victorian salon." Hall v. Gus Constr. Co., 842 F.2d 1010, 1017 (8th Cir. 1988). "White gloves, crystal, and fine china are neither required nor expected." Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 139 F.R.D. 657, 662 (D. Minn. 1991) ("Jenson I").[7] Title VII was not

7. The court discusses Jenson v. Eveleth in greater detail in Part III.C.2 infra. Jenson is perhaps one of the most famous employment discrimination cases in the Eighth Circuit. Hollywood made the case famous in the 2005 film North Country, which designed to "displace all ribaldry on the roadway," and "[o]ne may well expect that . . . language of the barracks will always predominate over that of the ballroom." Hall, 842 F.2d at 1017-18. With respect to the subjective standard, it is settled that, "if the victim does not subjectively perceive the environment to be abusive, the conduct has not actually altered the conditions of the victim's employment, and there is no Title VII violation." Harris, 510 U.S. at 21-22.

B. Differences Between "§ 706" & "§ 707" Lawsuits by the EEOC

Two distinct parts of Title VII separately authorize the EEOC to bring suit in its own name to ferret out unlawful sex discrimination: § 706 of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5 ("§ 706"), and § 707 of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6 ("§ 707").

1. Lawsuits under § 706

Section 706 permits the EEOC to sue a private employer on behalf of a "person or persons aggrieved" by the employer's unlawful employment practice. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1). The EEOC may file a § 706 lawsuit against a private employer, after the filing of a charge of unlawful employment discrimination with the EEOC, if the EEOC finds "reasonable cause" the employer has violated Title VII. Id.; see, e.g., Occidental Life, 432 U.S.

at 359-60 (summarizing process for the EEOC to file a § 706 lawsuit). In General Telephone, the seminal § 706 case, the Supreme Court succinctly explained:

> Title VII . . . authorizes the procedure that the EEOC followed in this case. Upon finding reasonable cause to believe that [a private employer] had discriminated against female employees [upon the filing of four individual charges of discrimination with the EEOC], the EEOC filed suit . . . . [T]he EEOC need look no further than § 706 for its authority to bring suit in its own name for the purpose, among others, of securing relief for a group of aggrieved individuals.

446 U.S. at 324.

The EEOC is "master of its own case" when bringing suits on behalf of aggrieved persons in a § 706 lawsuit. Waffle House, 534 U.S. at 291. For example, it may bring suit with or without the consent of the aggrieved persons. Id. at 291-92. Nonetheless, it is axiomatic that the EEOC stands in the shoes of those aggrieved persons in the sense that it must prove all of the elements of their sexual harassment claims to obtain individual relief for them. Likewise, the full range of legal remedies available to individuals is generally available to the EEOC if the EEOC prevails on their behalf. The EEOC is entitled to equitable relief, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g), and may also usually pursue compensatory and punitive damages, 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(a)(1).

Appendix O

2. Lawsuits under § 707

Section 707 permits the EEOC to bring suit against employers whom it has reasonable cause to believe are engaged in "a pattern or practice" of unlawful employment discrimination. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6; see also Gen. Tel. Co., 446 U.S. at 327 n. 9 ("If, for any reason, [the] EEOC .... believes a pattern or practice of discrimination exists in [a private employer], its recourse is to file a suit under § 707." (citations and emphasis omitted)). Like § 706, § 707 grants the EEOC the right to seek equitable relief against employers found to have intentionally engaged in a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6(a). Unlike § 706, however, the EEOC is not authorized to seek compensatory or punitive damages under § 707; the relevant portion of 42 U.S.C. § 1981a only authorizes recovery of compensatory and punitive damages "[i]n an action brought by a complaining party under [§ 706]." 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(a)(1).

"A pattern or practice case seeks to eradicate systemic, company-wide discrimination and focuses on an objectively verifiable policy or practice of discrimination by a private employer against its employees." Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1070. International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 97 S. Ct. 1843, 52 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1977) is the seminal § 707 case. In Teamsters, the United States[8] alleged a company, with the assistance of a union, engaged in a pattern or practice of discriminating against certain persons in failing to recruit, hire, transfer and promote them to higher paying, more desirable jobs, including "line driver" jobs, on an equal basis with white persons. 431 U.S. at 335. The United States brought the lawsuit under § 707 and alleged the company had engaged in a "pattern or practice" of unlawful employment discrimination. Id. at 328-29. The United States sought injunctive and other equitable relief, including "make whole" relief that would allow discriminatees to transfer to line driver positions without losing seniority. Id. at 330.

8. Section 707 originally authorized the Attorney General of the United States to bring "pattern or practice" lawsuits. The authority now rests with the EEOC. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 329 n.1 (discussing 1972 amendments to Title VII).

The United States presented damning statistical evidence to prove its pattern or practice claim:

> As of March 31, 1971, shortly after the Government filed its complaint alleging systemwide discrimination, the company had 6,472 employees. Of these, 314 (5%) were Negroes and 257 (4%) were Spanish-surnamed Americans. Of the 1,828 line drivers, however, there were only 8 (0.4%) Negroes and 5 (0.3%) Spanish-surnamed persons, and all of the Negroes had been hired after the litigation had commenced. With one exception--a man who worked as a line driver at the Chicago terminal from 1950 to 1959--the company and its predecessors did not employ a Negro on a regular basis as a line driver until 1969. And, as the Government showed, even in 1971 there were terminals in areas of substantial Negro population where all of the company's > line drivers were white. A great majority of the Negroes (83%) and Spanish-surnamed Americans (78%) who did work for the company held the lower paying city operations and serviceman jobs, whereas only 39% of the nonminority employees held jobs in those categories.

431 U.S. at 337-38 (footnotes omitted, emphasis in original). The United States also "bolstered its statistical evidence with the testimony of individuals who recounted over 40 specific instances of discrimination." Id. at 338.

After a trial, the district court found by a preponderance of the evidence that the company had engaged in a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination. Id. at 330-31. The district court granted most of the United States's requested equitable relief. Id. at 331-32. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence in the record to support the district court's determination that the employer had engaged in a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination. Id. at 337.

In affirming the judgment of the district court on this issue, the Supreme Court set forth the governing legal standard for pattern or practice claims. The standard survives to this date. To prove a pattern or practice claim, the EEOC must "establish by a preponderance of the evidence that racial discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure--the regular rather than the unusual practice." Id. at 336. That is, the EEOC is required "to prove more than the mere occurrence of isolated or 'accidental' or sporadic discriminatory acts." Id. In a footnote, the Supreme Court observed that "the 'pattern or practice" language in [§ 707] was not intended as a term of art, and the words reflect only their usual meaning." Id. at 336 n.16 (citation omitted). A pattern or practice is > "present only where the denial of rights consists of something more than an isolated, sporadic incident, but is repeated, routine, or of a generalized nature. There would be a pattern or practice if, for example, a number of companies or persons in the same industry or line of business discriminated, if a chain of motels or restaurants practiced racial discrimination throughout all or a significant part of its system, or if a company repeatedly and regularly engaged in acts prohibited by the statute. The point is that single, insignificant, isolated acts of discrimination by a single business would not justify a finding of a pattern or practice . . . ."

Id. (quoting Statement of Senator Humphrey, 110 Cong. Rec. 14270 (1964)); see also Catlett v. Mo. Hwy. & Transp. Comm'n, 828 F.2d 1260, 1265 (8th Cir. 1987) ("A pattern or practice is present when the discriminatory acts were not isolated, insignificant, or sporadic, but were repeated, routine or of a generalized nature[.]"); Craik v. Minn. State Univ. Bd., 731 F.2d 465, 486 (8th Cir. 1984) (Swygert, J., sitting by designation, dissenting in part) ("What must be proved . . . is that the employer engaged in a consistent rather than a sporadic pattern of discrimination.").

Appendix O

The Supreme Court also adopted a burden-shifting framework for pattern or practice suits in which disparate treatment on the basis of race is alleged. The Court explained:

> The plaintiff in a pattern-or-practice action is the Government, and its initial burden is to demonstrate that unlawful discrimination has been a regular procedure or policy followed by an employer or group of employers. At the initial, "liability" stage of a pattern-or-practice suit[,] the Government is not required to offer evidence that each person for whom it will ultimately seek relief was a victim of the employer's discriminatory policy. Its burden is to establish a prima facie case that such a policy existed. The burden then shifts to the employer to defeat the prima facie showing of a pattern or practice by demonstrating that the Government's proof is either inaccurate or insignificant. An employer might show, for example, that . . . during the period it is alleged to have pursued a discriminatory policy it made too few employment decisions to justify the inference that it had engaged in a regular practice of discrimination.
> If an employer fails to rebut the inference that arises from the Government's prima facie case, a trial court may then conclude that a violation has occurred and determine the appropriate remedy. Without any further evidence from the Government, a court's finding of a pattern or practice justifies an award of prospective relief. Such relief might take the form of an injunctive order against continuation of the discriminatory practice, an order that the employer keep records of its future employment decisions and file periodic reports with the court, or any other order "necessary to ensure the full enjoyment of the rights" protected by Title VII.

When the Government seeks individual relief for the victims of the discriminatory practice, a district court must usually conduct additional proceedings after the liability phase of the trial to determine the scope of individual relief. [A]s is typical of Title VII pattern-or-practice suits, the question of individual relief does not arise until it has been proved that the employer has followed an employment policy of unlawful discrimination. The force of that proof does not dissipate at the remedial stage of the trial. The employer cannot, therefore, claim that there is no reason to believe that its individual employment decisions were discriminatorily based; it has already been shown to have maintained a policy of discriminatory decisionmaking.

The proof of the pattern or practice supports an inference that any particular employment decision, during the period in which the discriminatory policy was in force, was made > in pursuit of that policy. The Government need only show that an alleged individual discriminatee unsuccessfully applied for a job and therefore was a potential victim of the proved discrimination. [T]he burden then rests on the employer to demonstrate that the individual applicant was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons.

Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360-62 (footnotes and citations omitted); see also Craik, 731 F.2d at 470 (clarifying that in pattern-or-practice cases, at the remedial stage the burden of persuasion--not just the burden of production--shifts to the employer).

3. Summary of differences

To summarize, "[t]here is a significant distinction between §§ 706 and 707 claims." Scolari, 488 F. Supp. 2d at 1143. As the Supreme Court has recognized:

> A Commissioner may file a charge in either of two situations. First, when a victim of discrimination is reluctant to file a charge . . . because of fear of retaliation, a Commissioner may file a charge on behalf of the victim. [42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5.] Second, when a Commissioner has reason to think that an employer has engaged in a "pattern or practice" of discriminatory conduct, he may file a charge on his own initiative. [42 U.S.C.] § 2000e-6.

EEOC v. Shell Oil Co., 466 U.S. 54, 62, 104 S. Ct. 1621, 80 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1984); see also Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1084 n.18 ("The Supreme Court's statements [in Shell Oil] recognize the difference between a § 706 and a § 707 case, by indicating that a Commissioner's charge under § 706 is filed on behalf of an individual, whereas a Commissioner's charge under § 707 is filed on "his own initiative" for the purpose of alleging a pattern or practice of discrimination rather than individual discrimination.").

Similarly, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals observed:

> The EEOC is .. authorized to file two types of civil actions to redress employment discrimination. Under [§] 707, it may bring a civil action when it determines that there is "reasonable cause to believe that any person or group of persons is engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of the rights secured (by provisions of the Act relating to employment discrimination), and that the pattern or practice is of such a nature and is intended to deny the full exercise of the rights herein described . . .." 42 U.S.C. [§] 2000e-6(a).
> Section 706, on the other hand, is addressed to vindication of individual instances of employment discrimination. [The] EEOC['s] involvement is initiated by the filing of a specific charge of employment discrimination. The EEOC must investigate and make a > finding as to reasonable cause. If reasonable cause is found to support the charge, the next step is conciliation. Only when conciliation is attempted and the efforts fail may the EEOC enter into litigation under [§] 706.

EEOC v. Cont'l Oil Co., 548 F.2d 884, 887 (10th Cir. 1977).

Finally, one district court elaborated:

> [A] § 706 case is based on one or more individual charges or complaints of unlawful discrimination by an employer, and a § 707 case is based on a pattern or practice of systemic discrimination by an employer. Although both a § 706 case and a § 707 case can be filed by the EEOC in its own name and initiated by a "Commissioner's charge," rather than an individual charge, the converse is not true. A § 707 case cannot be initiated by an individual charge, and it cannot be filed as a civil suit by an individual. A § 707 case is a "pattern or practice" case that challenges systemic, wide-spread discrimination by an employer. Conversely, a § 706 case seeks to vindicate, sometimes on a class-wide basis, the rights of aggrieved individuals who are challenging an unlawful employment practice by an employer. The distinction is subtle and not immediately apparent from the language of Title VII, but it is, nonetheless, an important distinction.

Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1084 (citation and footnote omitted).

4. Confusion in this case

"Notwithstanding [the] differences [between the two statutes], courts have blurred the line between class-wide claims brought pursuant to § 706 and pattern-or-practice claims brought pursuant to § 707." Scolari, 488 F. Supp. 2d at 1143 (citations omitted); see, e.g., Dial, 156 F. Supp. 2d at 969 (concluding that "a pattern-or-practice action can be brought, both as a general matter and in this case, for sexual harassment claims under §§ 706 and 707 of Title VII"). Not surprisingly, it appears much confusion has already crept into this case. The EEOC is pursuing matters in this case that it did not plead or allege in the EEOC's Complaint.

The EEOC's Complaint reads as if the EEOC were asserting a prototypical § 706 action. The EEOC squarely pled a violation of § 706. The EEOC did not plead a violation of § 707, and the phrase "pattern or practice"-- a phrase with which the EEOC is familiar--appears nowhere in the EEOC's Complaint. Consistent with its decision to only plead a violation of § 706, the EEOC seeks compensatory and punitive damages from CRST pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1981a.

In recent months, however, the EEOC has made clear to the court and CRST that it believes CRST had engaged in "a pattern or practice" of tolerating sexual harassment. See, e.g., Brief in Resistance to Statute of Limitations ("Lim. Br.") (docket no. 165-1), at 4 ("This is a case brought by the [EEOC], alleging a pattern or practice of tolerating a hostile work environment based on sexual harassment."). The EEOC belatedly sought bifurcation of trial in accordance with Teamsters. It also announced its intention to invoke the Teamsters burden-shifting framework.

In sum, it would appear the EEOC is attempting to have its cake and eat it too. That is, the EEOC is attempting to avail itself of the Teamsters burden-shifting framework yet still seek compensatory and punitive damages under § 706. Cf. Dial, 156 F. Supp. 2d at 930 (seeking compensatory and punitive damages in a § 707 lawsuit). Complicating matters further, it is important to remember that the Supreme Court designed the Teamsters burden-shifting framework with only equitable relief in mind. See Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 130 F.3d 1287, 1290 n.4 (8th Cir. 1997) (discussing 1991 amendments to Title VII, which allowed plaintiffs to seek compensatory and punitive damages under § 706); see also Bemis, 279 F.3d at 421 (pointing out that merely injunctive relief and back pay and not "common-law-type damages" were available when the Supreme Court decided General Telephone).

Fortunately, the court need not cut through this cloud of confusion to rule on the Motion. CRST does not argue that the EEOC's Complaint fails to state a "pattern or practice claim." Indeed, CRST filed the instant Motion to seek its dismissal; presumably, CRST does not seek to dismiss what it does not believe to exist. Accordingly, the court assumes without deciding that at least one of two legal principles is true: either (1) § 706 somehow permits the EEOC to pursue a pattern or practice claim and thereby render § 707 a mere redundancy in the law[9] or (2) the EEOC has constructively amended its complaint to assert a § 707 claim against CRST in this lawsuit in addition to its § 706 claim. In other words, the court assumes without deciding that this is a sexual harassment pattern or practice case.

C. Sexual Harassment Pattern or Practice Cases are Special

1. The Teamsters model "breaks down"

Sexual harassment pattern or practice cases are special. As several district courts have recognized over the last two decades, the Teamsters pattern or practice model "breaks down" when the unlawful employment practice at issue is sexual harassment based on a hostile work

9. In response to a pending motion, the EEOC maintains that any distinction between §§ 706 and 707 "is not useful" because, in its view, both statutes authorize pattern or practice cases and require "identical" elements of proof. Lim. Br. at 10. Without citing any controlling legal authority, the EEOC concludes that "there is no difference between pleading either statute." Id. at 11; see, e.g., EEOC v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Nw., Inc., 599 F.2d 322, 328-33 & nn.13-14 (9th Cir.) (appearing to reach conclusion that § 707 is a redundancy in the law), aff'd on other grounds, 446 U.S. 318, 100 S. Ct. 1698, 64 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1979); Craik, 731 F.2d at 468-70 (sanctioning use of Teamsters model in § 706 class action brought by private plaintiffs) (citing Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747, 772, 96 S. Ct. 1251, 47 L. Ed. 2d 444 (1976)); see also Jenson, 130 F.3d at 1299-1300 (discussed in Part III.C.2 infra).

environment. Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1071; see also Int'l Profit Assocs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069, at *3 (similar); Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Corp., 824 F. Supp. 847, 875-76 (D. Minn. 1993) ("Jenson II") (similar). One of the district courts to address the issue most recently observed:

> [I]n a race discrimination case[,] it is clear why a pattern or practice finding should have an effect on an employer's liability to individual claimants. If an employer has an established policy of making employment decisions with racial animus in violation of Title VII, it is likely that any specific employment decision also violates Title VII, and if a particular decision was not discriminatory, the employer is in the best position to show why. However, the impact of a pattern or practice finding in a hostile work environment sexual harassment case is not so clear. In contrast with a race discrimination case--where the focus is on the employer's basis for making an employment decision that adversely affected the claimant--a sexual harassment case centers on the gravity of the conduct to which a claimant was exposed. The sexual harassment suffered by the claimant must have been severe or pervasive enough (measured both objectively and subjectively) to constructively alter the terms or conditions of the claimant's employment by creating a hostile work environment. Otherwise, no Title VII violation has occurred. Therefore, a finding > that an employer had a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment in violation of Title VII does not necessarily establish that an individual claimant was exposed to harassment or that the harassment an individual claimant suffered violates Title VII. It is thus unclear what effect a pattern or practice finding should have on an individual claimant's suit for damages.

Int'l Profit Assocs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069 at *3 (citations omitted).

2. The modified burden-shifting approach of Jenson II

Jenson II was the first reported case to address the tension between the Teamsters burden-shifting framework and the Supreme Court's sexual harassment jurisprudence. Notwithstanding its status as a private class action lawsuit, Jenson II is similar to the case at bar insofar as the district court assumed the Teamsters burden-shifting framework applied to § 706. Jenson II, 824 F. Supp. at 860 (citing Craik, 731 F.2d at 470). As indicated in Part III.C.1 supra, the court assumes without deciding that the EEOC is properly pursuing a pattern or practice claim under § 706 on behalf of similarly situated aggrieved persons in this action, even though Congress apparently contemplated that the EEOC would bring its pattern or practice lawsuits under § 707 and Teamsters was a § 707 case in which only equitable relief was available.

Appendix O

After a bench trial, the district court found that the defendant-employer had engaged in a pattern or practice of sex discrimination. Id. at 874-88. Specifically, the court found that it was the company's standard operating procedure to tolerate a hostile work environment based on sex. Id. Among other things, the district court found that (1) men occupied virtually every supervisory and managerial position and created a "sexualized environment" for their female subordinates, id. at 885; (2) women worked in a largely unified work environment in which "[v]irtually all of the relevant testimony and evidence indicates that male employees, [including first-line supervisors,] felt free to and did exhibit sexually-focused material anywhere they chose," id. at 880; (3) "verbal statements and language reflect[ed] a sexualized, male-oriented, and anti-female atmosphere," id.; (4) plaintiffs presented expert testimony to show rampant "sex stereotyping" at work, id. at 880-81 & n.81; (5) the defendant-employer's management was aware and should have been aware of the hostile work environment, id. at 886-88; (6) the defendant-employer failed to establish a system for processing sexual harassment complaints, id. at 887; (7) the defendant-employer did not discipline harassers even though they were readily identifiable, id.; (8) no member of management was assigned the responsibility to curtail sexual harassment in the workplace, id.; and (9) the defendant-employer made "no effort" to communicate with its employees that sexual harassment was wrong, id. at 888.

In reaching these findings, the district court considered itself ordinarily bound to apply the Teamsters burden-shifting framework in § 706 private class action lawsuits. Id. at 860 (citing Craik, 731 F.2d at 470). However, the district court identified the tension between the Teamsters burden-shifting framework and the Supreme Court's sexual harassment jurisprudence and devised the following solution:

> Should the employer be found to have engaged in a pattern or practice of discriminating against women by maintaining a hostile environment, the plaintiff class will be eligible for appropriate prospective relief and other remedies consistent with a finding of liability in other pattern or practice cases. However, the nature of a hostile environment claim mandates that the nature of the recovery phase differ from traditional pattern and practice cases. Specifically, a determination that the employer engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination by maintaining a hostile environment does not entitle every member of the plaintiff class to a presumption that they were sexually harassed--the burden of persuasion does not shift to the employer. Instead, the burden of persuasion remains on the individual class members; each must show by a preponderance of the evidence that she was as affected as the reasonable woman. If this showing is made, the individual member is entitled to all the remedies available under Title VII . . . . In a hostile environment class action, therefore, every member of the plaintiff class remains a "potential victim" in the true sense of the term.

This result is dictated by the fact that the proof introduced during the liability phase cannot resolve a disparate issue of fact essential to claims alleging hostile environment: whether individual members of the plaintiff class were as affected as the reasonable woman would have been. Because the employee's subjective response to acts of sexual harassment is an essential part of proving a claim of hostile environment sexual harassment, a presumption that the employer discriminated against individual class members may not arise from a determination that the reasonable woman would have been affected by the acts of sexual harassment. Individual employees should not be allowed to circumvent an essential element of a hostile environment claim merely because they are permitted to pursue their claims as a class . . . .

Nevertheless[,] . . . liability to the class is established by a determination that the employer engaged in a pattern or practice of exposing women to acts of sexual harassment sufficient to alter the terms or conditions of the reasonable woman's employment. Accordingly, individual class members need only show that they were at least as affected as the reasonable woman. The other elements of a hostile environment claim are established by the court's determination in the liability phase of the proceedings.

Id. at 875-76 (citations and footnotes omitted). To rule to the contrary would "effectively shift[] to [the] defendant the burden of proof on an issue which is carried by the plaintiff in an individual action." Id. at 876 n.73. On appeal in Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 130 F.3d 1287 (8th Cir. 1997), the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals adopted the district court's modification of the Teamsters burden-shifting framework in pattern or practice sexual harassment cases.

Some courts and commentators have overlooked the importance of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals's decision in Jenson. Compare EEOC v. Carrols Corp., No. 5:98-CV-1772, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, 2005 WL 928634, at *2 n.4 ("[N]o Court of Appeals has yet addressed the question."), Int'l Profit Assocs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069, at *6 ("[N]o appellate courts have addressed this issue[.]") and Timothy G. Healy, Note, Sexual Pattern: Why a Pattern or Practice Theory of Liability is Not an Appropriate Framework for Claims of Sexual Harassment, 10 Roger Williams U. L. Rev. 537, 538 (2005) ("Healy Article") ("[T]he issue of whether sexual harassment cases can proceed under a pattern or practice framework . . . has received virtually no attention in the federal courts of appeals."), with Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1078 n.13 (recognizing that the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals "placed its imprimatur on the district court's conclusion that the burden shifting framework of . . . [Teamsters] applies in a pattern or practice class case to shift a burden of proof to the employer, once an individual has established the subjective elements of her case" (emphasis omitted). The significance of the Eighth

Circuit Court of Appeals's opinion is perhaps obscured by the fact that much of the opinion is focused on unrelated issues and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals does not elaborate on its reasons for adopting the framework. This part of the opinion, however, is definitely not dicta. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed and remanded on the issue of damages because a special master had failed to apply the district court's modified Teamsters burden-shifting framework. After discussing Teamsters, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals stated:

> In the damages phase, the plaintiffs still were required to show they were as affected by that hostile environment as a reasonable woman would be affected. [Jenson II], 824 F. Supp. at 876)). However, once they made that showing, the burden of proof shifted to [the defendant-employer] to show that it was more likely than not that their decision to not return to work was not the product of the hostile work environment. On this basis, these claims for economic loss are remanded to the district court to be calculated under the proper burden-shifting principles.

Jenson, 130 F.3d at 1300. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals specifically expressed its holding as follows:

> We find the Special Master did not apply the appropriate burden-shifting principles in its analysis . . . . Specifically, the Special Master failed to place the burden of proof on [the defendant-employer] to show that the plaintiffs' > resignations were not caused by the hostile working environment once the Special Master determined the individual plaintiff[s] had established the requisite subjective element of their hostile environment claim.

Id. at 1299 (emphasis in original).

3. Summary

Accordingly, if the court finds that it was CRST's "standard operating procedure" to tolerate sexual harassment in its workplaces, the court must apply the Teamsters burden-shifting framework as modified by Jenson II. Jenson II's modified burden-shifting framework is the law of the Eighth Circuit in hostile work environment sexual harassment pattern or practice cases. The court is obliged to decline to follow other district courts that have expressly rejected Jenson II, see, e.g., Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1069-82, or reached seemingly contrary results, see, e.g., Dial, 156 F. Supp. 2d at 947-49.[10]

10. Mitsubishi extended the Teamsters burden-shifting framework to sexual harassment cases without much reservation. The court conceded its decision effectively eliminated the subjective element of the individual plaintiff's prima facie case, required modification of Meritor and Harris and obliterated some of the employer's individual defenses. The district court reasoned that the subjective element was "virtually a formality" and shifting the burden of proof to a defendant "does not appear to be anything new in sexual harassment law, since that burden has essentially always been borne by the employer." 990 F. Supp. at 1078. The district court also made the following circular argument:

> The Court's rationale for eliminating the subjective proofs necessary in an individual action at the pattern or practice stage is quite simple. Sexual harassment claims involve individual questions and defenses which cannot be tried, as to the class, on common issues of liability. This is the problem and the solution.

Id. at 1076 (footnote omitted). Dial by and large followed Mitsubishi without revisiting the underlying arguments at issue.

Mitsubishi and Dial are controversial among district courts within the Seventh Circuit. See, e.g., Int'l Profit Assocs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069, at *12 (declining to follow Mitsubishi, Dial and Jenson II). Although Mitsubishi and Dial were two of the first sexual harassment pattern or practice cases in the country, "[i]t is worth noting that neither [case] ever reached trial[.]" 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, [WL] at *8. The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals has not placed its imprimatur on either case.

"The EEOC's primary role is that of a law enforcement agency and it is merely a detail that it pays over any monetary relief obtained to the victims of the defendant's violation . . . ." Bemis, 279 F.3d at 421. As in International Profit Associates, however, throughout this case the EEOC has sought "to blend aspects of Mitsubishi, Dial, and Jenson to create an approach that will dramatically increase its odds of prevailing . . , particularly with its ability to recover punitive and compensatory damages." 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, [WL] at *9; see, e.g., EEOC v. CRST Van Expedited, Inc., No. 07-CV-95-LRR, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36324, 2009 WL 972855, *3 (N.D. Iowa Feb. 25, 2009) (forestalling the EEOC's attempt to recover punitive damages on a "class-wide basis"). Armed with Mitsubishi and Dial, it is not surprising few cases have gone to trial or reached the circuit courts of appeals. See Healy Article at 537 (observing that pattern or practice cases are cumbersome and expensive to

The court must also decline one recent commentator's invitation to abandon the Teamsters burden-shifting framework altogether. See Healy Article at 538 ("When considering the inherently individualized nature of sexual harassment claims and all of the procedural problems as a whole, it is evident that a pattern or practice theory of liability is not an appropriate framework for bringing sexual harassment claims.").

III. THE MERITS

Assuming without deciding that this is a pattern or practice sexual harassment case and bound to the modified burden-shifting framework of Jenson II, the fighting issue in the Motion is whether the EEOC has presented the court with sufficient evidence to warrant a jury trial on its pattern or practice claim.

A. Standard for Summary Judgment

Summary judgment is appropriate if the record shows that "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). "An issue of fact is genuine when 'a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party' on the question." Woods v. DaimlerChrysler Corp., 409 F.3d 984, 990 (8th Cir. 2005) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S. Ct. 2505, litigate) & 578 (discussing Mitsubishi and Dial and observing that the unwarranted extension of the Teamsters burden-shifting framework to sexual harassment pattern or practice cases "has resulted in substantial settlements").

91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986)). A fact is material when it "might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. The court must view the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party and afford it all reasonable inferences. Baer Gallery, Inc. v. Citizen's Scholarship Found. of Am., 450 F.3d 816, 820 (8th Cir. 2006) (citing Drake ex rel. Cotton v. Koss, 445 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir. 2006)).

Procedurally, the moving party bears "the initial responsibility of informing the district court of the basis for its motion and identifying those portions of the record which show a lack of a genuine issue." Hartnagel v. Norman, 953 F.2d 394, 395 (8th Cir. 1992) (citing Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323, 106 S. Ct. 2548, 91 L. Ed. 2d 265 (1986)). Once the moving party has successfully carried its burden under Rule 56(c), the nonmoving party has an affirmative burden to go beyond the pleadings and by depositions, affidavits, or otherwise, "set out specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e)(2); see, e.g., Baum v. Helget Gas Prods., Inc., 440 F.3d 1019, 1022 (8th Cir. 2006) ("Summary judgment is not appropriate if the non-moving party can set forth specific facts, by affidavit, deposition, or other evidence, showing a genuine issue for trial."). The nonmoving party must offer proof "such that a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party." Anderson, 477 U.S. at 248. "'Evidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment.'" Reasonover v. St. Louis County, Mo., 447 F.3d 569, 578 (8th Cir. 2006) (quoting Mayer v. Nextel W. Corp., 318 F.3d 803, 809 (8th Cir. 2003)).

Appendix O

B. Preliminary Evidentiary Rulings

For purposes of the Motion, the material facts are largely undisputed. First, each party expressly admits many of the other party's Local Rule 56 individual statements of material fact. Second, some of the EEOC's Local Rule 56.b.2 qualifications and denials of CRST's Local Rule 56.a.3 individual statements of material fact contain incorrect citations to the EEOC's appendix or otherwise lack support in the record. The court deems those respective statements to be admitted. See LR 56.b ("The failure to respond, with appropriate citations to the appendix, to an individual statement of material fact constitutes an admission of that fact."); see, e.g., Libel v. Adventure Lands of Am., Inc., 482 F.3d 1028, 1032-33 (8th Cir. 2007) (affirming district court's decision to deem statements of material fact to be admitted). Third, some of the EEOC's Local Rule 56.b.3 statements of additional material fact are similarly deficient, and so the court declines to assume their truth. Finally, the court declines to consider any evidence that lacks foundation or would otherwise be inadmissible at trial. See, e.g., Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Thien, 8 F.3d 1307, 1310 (8th Cir. 1993) ("The district court must base its determination regarding the presence or absence of a material issue of factual dispute on evidence that will be admissible at trial."). For example, in its resistance materials the EEOC relies heavily upon complaints or reports of sex discrimination involving 99 women it failed to make available to CRST for deposition during discovery. Such complaints and related evidence is inadmissible for all of the reasons stated in Judge Scoles' Ruling (docket no. 193) granting in part

Appendix O

CRST's Motion to Strike (docket no. 171).

C. Summary Judgment Facts

Viewed in the light most favorable to the EEOC and affording the EEOC all reasonable inferences, Baer Gallery, 450 F.3d at 820, the summary judgment facts are these:

1. CRST's business model

CRST is a family-owned trucking business. It was founded in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in 1955. It operates nationwide.

CRST owns the trucking industry's largest fleet of team-driven tractors. CRST offers "just in time" and other premium transportation services. CRST focuses on long-haul transport but also provides short-haul and regional deliveries, air cargo shipping and dedicated fleets.

CRST fills a "market niche" and makes deliveries faster than its competitors. Two drivers working together are able to make deliveries faster than one driver acting alone. A single CRST truck is able to operate as many as twenty-two hours a day, with each driver "at the wheel" for up to eleven hours.

Working conditions for CRST's drivers are different from those of most other jobs. Drivers spend up to twenty-two hours a day in a tractor with a single coworker. Each two-person team must remain in a small truck cab while the tractor is moving. The cab is a combination driving and living compartment and consists of two front seats and a berth area with two bunk beds. Trips last up to twenty-one days, and drivers usually spend no time with their families during these trips. Access to restrooms and showers is limited. Drivers must find truck stops or rest areas, which takes time and thereby impacts the delivery time of the load and the drivers' pay. Drivers work in distant locations, and supervisors rarely see drivers working together. Fatality rates show truck driving is the ninth most dangerous occupation in the United States of America. All told, CRST's drivers share more in common with astronauts, submariners or lighthouse watchmen than they do with the average office worker.

2. Front-line personnel

CRST focuses on hiring entry-level drivers, because it can be difficult to find experienced drivers in the labor market. CRST employs three categories of drivers: "trainees" a/k/a "students," "co-drivers," and "lead drivers" a/k/a "trainers." All three categories of drivers report to "dispatchers" a/k/a "fleet managers."

Appendix O

a. Trainees

Generally, each trainee works with a lead driver for twenty-eight days. CRST pays trainees a flat rate of approximately $ 50 a day. Lead drivers show trainees how to drive CRST's tractors, monitor their progress and evaluate them at the conclusion of the training period. Lead drivers do not have the authority to hire, fire, promote, demote or reassign trainees; CRST's Safety and Operations Departments make all final decisions with respect to the trainees' employment. Successful trainees become co-drivers once CRST graduates them.

b. Co-drivers

Co-drivers earn a more lucrative "split-mileage rate." Under the split-mileage rate, each co-driver in a two-member team is paid a certain amount per mile for half of the miles the tractor travels when delivering cargo. Co-drivers are equal to each other and do not have the authority to hire, fire, promote, demote or reassign one another.

c. Lead drivers

Co-drivers become lead drivers upon the recommendation of their dispatchers and after safety reviews. Mr. George Brandmayr, CRST's Lead Driver Program Manager, does not generally interview lead driver candidates and does not actively inquire as to whether lead driver candidates have a history of sexual harassment.

d. Dispatchers

Dispatchers generally assign drivers to two-person teams based upon geographical considerations. For example, dispatchers try to place trainees with lead drivers who reside near them.

Dispatchers generally assign drivers without their input. It is CRST's policy that lead drivers are not permitted to ask to work with a member of the opposite sex.[11] However, drivers may request a reassignment, and dispatchers make reassignments when necessary.

The reassignment process may be difficult in many circumstances. Further, dispatchers often have an economic disincentive to grant reassignment requests. CRST rates its dispatchers on how well they meet production goals; reassignments may adversely affect a dispatcher's "in-service time," that is, the amount of time the trucks she manages are available to move freight. Changing lead drivers may also delay completion of a driver's training or result in lower pay for co-drivers and lead drivers.

3. Status of women at CRST

CRST employs female trainees, co-drivers, lead drivers and dispatchers. Even though CRST makes no

---

11. The EEOC presented anecdotal evidence to show that drivers violated this policy. See, e.g., Pl's App'x at 849 (business record noting a driver stated he "WILL TAKE FEMALES ONLY" (emphasis in original)).

special efforts to recruit women, approximately 14% of CRST's drivers are female. Given the availability of women in the relevant labor market, CRST employs more than three times as many women as an expert would predict.

CRST has a gender-neutral policy with respect to all of its driver teams: women and men often drive together. In two previous cases against trucking companies that adopted a same-sex team-driver policy, the EEOC investigated, threatened suit and sought punitive damages. Both cases were settled with consent decrees that forbade the companies from maintaining their same-sex team-driver policies.

4. CRST's policy against sexual harassment

CRST has adopted an official policy--written and unwritten--against sexual harassment and other forms of unlawful employment discrimination. A portion of CRST's Professional Driver's Handbook ("Driver Handbook") illustrates CRST's policy against sex discrimination. In pertinent part, the Driver Handbook states:

> CRST is committed to providing a work environment that is free of harassment and discrimination. In keeping with this commitment, CRST maintains a strict policy prohibiting harassment or discrimination based on . . . sex . . . . This includes any form of verbal, non-verbal, physical and visual harassment. This policy applies to all employees of CRST, including supervisors and non-supervisory employees.

Appendix O

Moreover it is the policy of CRST to prevent and prohibit misconduct on the job, including sexual harassment or any other type of harassment or discrimination by co-workers, other employees, including supervisors, and persons doing business with or for [CRST]. Any employee who reports any act of harassment and/or discrimination will NOT be subject to ANY form of retaliation. All reports of harassment and/or discrimination will be handled in a confidential manner.

Any employee found to have acted in violation of the foregoing policies will be subject to appropriate disciplinary action, up to and including termination.

Employees who are subjected to/or witness harassment or discrimination should immediately report such conduct to any one of the following members of management:

Immediate Supervisor

Director of Human Resources - (319) 390-2770 . . . or - 1-800-366-8460

[CRST] will take the following steps in addressing complaints of harassment or discrimination in a confidential manner:

1. Fully inform the employee of his/her avenues to report and redress the harassment pursuant to [CRST's] internal complaint procedure. Advise the employee that s/he will not be disciplined or otherwise retaliated against as a result of making a complaint.

2. Immediately conduct a thorough, objective and complete investigation of the alleged harassment and make a determination about whether unlawful harassment has occurred.

3. Take prompt and effective remedial action commensurate with the severity of the offense of harassment that occurred.

4. Advise the employee of actions taken to address the complaint.

Responsibility of Employees

It is the responsibility of all employees to comply with this policy and to report all known violations of this policy to the appropriate supervisor, manager, or Human Resource representative so that corrective action may be taken.

Def.'s App'x at 145-46 (emphases in original).

Appendix O

CRST requires newly hired drivers to attend a three-and-a-half day orientation. CRST employs "safety trainers" a/k/a "driver trainers" to lead the orientation and provide its drivers sexual harassment training. During the orientation, CRST's safety trainers provide drivers with a copy of the Driver Handbook and explain the company's policy against unlawful sexual harassment and other unlawful employment discrimination. Since early 2008, CRST also has shown its drivers a DVD presentation entitled "CRST Harassment Prevention and Reporting for Drivers."

At the conclusion of the orientation, new drivers acknowledge they have received, read and understood the sexual harassment policy in the Driver Handbook. CRST's written acknowledgment form provides:

> Acknowledgment and Pledge Concerning Unlawful Harassment and Discrimination
> I ACKNOWLEDGE I have received and read [CRST's] Policy Against Unlawful Harassment and Discrimination. I understand that [CRST] does not tolerate any form of harassment or discrimination at work, including sexual harassment, and any employee who is found to have violated the Policy will be subject to appropriate disciplinary action up to and including termination.
> I PLEDGE to conduct myself in accordance with [CRST's] [Policy] and State and Federal Law prohibiting unlawful harassment and discrimination.

Id. at 146-47 (emphases in original).

Safety trainers provide lead drivers a special training, in which CRST reemphasizes its policy against sexual harassment and other forms of unlawful employment discrimination. Since early 2008, lead drivers have watched a special DVD entitled "CRST Harassment Prevention and Reporting for Lead Drivers." Lead drivers also sign acknowledgment forms after completing their special training and watching the DVD.

In 2006, CRST began providing dispatchers with annual sexual harassment training. Prior to 2006, only operations mangers and mangers above them received annual training on sexual harassment; the only sexual harassment training dispatchers received prior to 2006 was sexual harassment training during orientation and occasional meetings with a member of the Department of Human Resources. In 2007, CRST began providing annual sexual harassment training to safety trainers, safety supervisors and recruiters.

CRST does not provide any annual training about sexual harassment to its drivers. Providing annual sexual harassment training to all drivers would be difficult, because CRST operates over a thousand tractors nationwide and on many different schedules. CRST's "workplaces" are widely dispersed.

For the past several years, however, CRST has hired outside lawyers to give in-house presentations to its employees about sexual harassment prevention.

These lawyers educate CRST's managers, including its dispatchers, about sexual harassment so the managers may conduct themselves in a professional manner and identify and report sexual harassment in CRST's workplaces. The lawyers also instruct the managers about how to deal with drivers' complaints of sexual harassment.

CRST displays posters at all company locations that include information about federal equal employment opportunity law and CRST's policy against sex discrimination, including sexual harassment and unlawful retaliation. CRST also displays posters in its truck terminals about "ReportLine," a toll-free phone number employees may call to report unprofessional, illegal and unethical behavior such as sexual harassment. The poster states:

> CRST Companies are committed to operating in a professional, safe and ethical work environment. If you are aware of anything that conflicts with our mission: Talk to your Manager; Talk to Human Resources; Or Call ReportLine. Available 24 Hours/Day, 7 Days/ Week. 1-866-207-9076. You do not have to give your name. Remember . . . We're in this for the long haul.

Id. at 148.

An independently staffed, third-party company has operated ReportLine for the benefit of CRST employees since April of 2007. All personnel-related complaints

ReportLine receives are forwarded to CRST's Human Resources Department for review. Employees may make anonymous complaints. Upon receiving a complaint forwarded from ReportLine, CRST's Human Resources Department is responsible for investigating the complaint and notifying the third-party company that CRST has taken action. ReportLine then contacts the employee to apprise her of the status of CRST's investigation. Employees who wish to remain anonymous are given a phone number they may call to receive the same information.

CRST publishes various newsletters, memoranda and other materials that reiterate and reinforce its sexual harassment policies and procedures for the benefit of its employees. For example, CRST Driving Force is an intra-company publication for office employees whose editions discourage employees from engaging in unprofessional, illegal and unethical behavior. CRST's Code of Business Conduct and Ethics states:

> [T]he work environment must be free of any form of discrimination and conduct which may be considered harassing, disruptive or intimidating. Harassment based on sex . . . is strictly prohibited. Any instances of harassment in any form are to be reported immediately to the appropriate Supervisor or the Human Resources Department.

Appendix O

The Driver Handbook lists sexual harassment as a [d]ischargeable [a]ction[]." Id. at 149. It also reiterates that lead drivers and trainees must "comply with all CRST policies against unlawful harassment/sexual harassment and creating a hostile work environment in the workplace." Id. at 150.

The Office Employee Handbook ("Office Handbook") is distributed to all office staff, including all fleet managers. It includes CRST's policy against sex discrimination and other unlawful employment practices.

The Office Handbook also refers to sexual harassment as an offense subject to discipline. The 2007 version of the Office Handbook contains an "Unlawful Discrimination and Harassment (Positive Work Environment) Policy," which provides managers with detailed instructions for responding to complaints of sexual harassment.

5. Multiple avenues for reporting sexual harassment

CRST employs trained and experienced professionals within its Human Resources Department. CRST's human resources professionals enforce its policy against sexual harassment and other forms of unlawful employment practices.

Mr. James Barnes, Director of CRST's Human Resources Department, joined CRST in 2005 and oversees all of its sexual harassment investigations. He is ultimately responsible for ensuring that CRST's policies are enforced.

He is responsible for deciding what discipline to impose at the conclusion of each investigation. Mr. Barnes has over twenty-three years of experience in human resources, including fifteen years of conducting investigations. He attends one or two EEOC training seminars each year.

Ms. Lisa Oetken f/k/a Lisa Laveck is CRST's Human Resources Generalist. Ms. Oetken has investigated complaints of sexual harassment since 2005. CRST's Human Resources Directors trained Ms. Oetken how to conduct investigations. She also trained at the University of Iowa in employment law. She attends training on sexual harassment policy provided by CRST's outside counsel and various employment law training sessions. Further, she reads periodicals to maintain up-to-date information on sexual harassment policy and procedures.

CRST's human resources professionals have worked together to provide drivers and other employees with multiple channels for reporting sexual harassment. CRST receives complaints of sexual harassment in various ways, including:

- ReportLine.

- CRST's open door policy. CRST encourages all of its employees to approach their supervisors, any employee in the Operations Department or the Safety Departments or any manager about any issues they would like to raise. All employees, including drivers, have the ability to walk freely throughout CRST company buildings to find someone to speak with;

- Toll-free phone numbers for fleet managers. Drivers may call these phone numbers anytime to reach a fleet manager.

- Qualcomm. A Qualcomm is a device on all trucks that allows drivers to communicate directly with fleet managers while the drivers are on the road. Qualcomm messages are similar to emails but are not private; the other driver on the truck may be able to read them. They are also prone to system shut-downs and other delays.

- The Human Resources Department's nationwide toll-free phone number and local toll phone number. These phone numbers are found in the Driver Handbook.

- Evaluation forms. At the conclusion of training, trainees are encouraged to fill out an evaluation form commenting on or complaining about the lead drivers to whom they were assigned.

These multiple avenues for reporting sexual harassment place redundancies into CRST's efforts to root out sexual harassment and other unlawful employment practice in its workplaces. If a prospective complainant does not receive an immediate response from one resource, she may utilize another resource and work her way up CRST's chain of command.

Appendix O

6. Response and discipline

CRST has put into place a specific protocol for dispatchers and other managers to follow upon receiving a complaint of sexual harassment. CRST informs its dispatchers of their responsibilities during training.

According to the Office Handbook, "[s]upervisors who become aware of any incidents or alleged incidents of discrimination or harassment must immediately report them to the Human Resources Director." Id. at 150. "Supervisors may not try to resolve allegations of such behavior on their own." Id. "Any supervisor who fails to report allegations of discrimination or harassment may be subject to discipline, up to and including discharge." Id.

The Office Handbook also defines specific procedures for supervisors when handling the complaints of drivers, who are almost always working on the road in remote locations. Namely,

> [t]he driver's responsible [dispatcher] should determine whether the driver wishes to be removed from the situation, and if so, re-assign the driver to a new lead driver or co-driver as the case may be. The [dispatcher] is to work with the Human Resources [D]epartment to arrange for the driver to make a statement of complaint.

Id. As a matter of CRST policy, a driver is never re-assigned to drive with a driver whom she claims sexually harassed her.

For example, when a dispatcher receives a call, Qualcomm, or other communication from a driver who alleges that one of her co-workers has sexually harassed her, the dispatcher must first determine whether the driver is safe or needs to be separated from the alleged harasser. One of CRST's relevant policy documents provides:

> The driver's responsible [dispatcher] should determine whether the driver wishes to be removed from the situation, and if so, re-assign the driver to a new lead driver or co-driver as the case may be.

Id. at 152. Dispatchers "may not try to resolve allegations of [incidents of discrimination and harassment] on their own." Id. at 153.

Under CRST's policy, dispatchers ought not spend time deciding whether the allegations are valid or try to resolve the sexual harassment issue before removing the complainant from the offending environment. CRST's policy requires dispatchers to provide an immediate response when approached with an allegation of sexual harassment. CRST does not provide dispatchers with specific training on how to remove complainants from tractors when an allegation of sexual harassment arises. However, CRST gives its dispatchers the tools and support necessary to provide an immediate response to alleged victims of sexual harassment. Dispatchers are authorized to arrange for a hotel room for the alleged victim, and for transportation, including a cab, rental car, bus ticket or other transportation, depending on which would separate the alleged victim from the environment as soon as reasonably possible. Management supports dispatchers' decisions to make these accommodations.

Dispatchers may arrange to move the alleged victim to the nearest safe location or terminal as soon as reasonably practical, even if the alleged victim indicates she feels safe and does not need to be extricated from the situation immediately. If the alleged victim does not feel safe but does not think she can safely get off her truck, it might be necessary for the dispatcher to "manufacture" a scenario that requires the truck to stop at a terminal or rendevous with another CRST tractor. Alternatively, if the alleged victim's allegations warrant such action, the dispatcher may recommend that the driver contact the local police to safely recover personal belongings from the truck or to notify them of possible criminal behavior.

Human Resources Department personnel must investigate all reported harassment complaints. CRST may respond to sexual harassment allegations with a variety of disciplinary actions, including (1) verbal warnings, (2) written warnings, (3) counseling sessions with Human Resources personnel, (4) removal of lead driver certification, (5) restrictions preventing the alleged offender from driving with certain groups of drivers and (6) termination.

CRST often restricts alleged harassers from driving with women for at least six months. When a driver is restricted from driving with a woman, a notification stating "No Females" is placed on his "Five Screen."

Appendix O

A Five Screen is a record appearing in the company's computer database. Dispatchers may view the driver's Five Screen before arranging driver pairs. The Five Screen thus alerts dispatchers that the driver should not be assigned to drive with women. CRST's policy is for dispatchers to enter the restriction on the Five Screen so that they are aware of the restriction for the drivers who report to them. Reinstatement occurs only upon the driver's request and if approved by Mr. Barnes.

7. Incidence of sexual harassment among CRST's drivers

From January 1, 2005 through September 8, 2008, CRST employed 2,701 female drivers who were teamed on at least one occasion with at least one male driver. In the same period, 146 of CRST's female drivers alleged sexual harassment by at least one male driver. Those 146 female drivers represent 5.4% of the total 2,701 female drivers employed by CRST who were teamed with at least one male driver during the period.

Over the same time period, there were 6,978 female-male driving teams. The 146 female drivers made a claim of harassment involving 188 of these teams. Therefore, 2.7% of all female/male teams involve a complaint of sexual harassment.

The 6,978 female/male teams drove a total of 373,841 trips during the January 1, 2005 through September 8, 2008 period. The 188 teams that include a claim of harassment made 3,121 trips. Therefore, 0.8% of the total number of trips involved teams in which a complaint of sexual harassment was made.

The 6,978 female/male teams drove a total of 684,581 days. The teams that include a claim of harassment drove 5,826 days. Therefore, 0.9% of all days driven involved teams where a complaint of sexual harassment was made.

The 6,978 female/male teams drove a total of 226,445,880 miles. The teams where a claim of sexual harassment was made represent 1,804,804 miles. Therefore, 0.8% of all the miles driven were by teams where a complaint of sexual harassment was made.

Although some women testified that they had heard of the sexual harassment of other female drivers by their trainers and co-drivers, no female driver observed the sexual harassment of another female driver. There is no evidence any of CRST's managers sexually harassed drivers. Likewise, there is no evidence anyone sexually harassed CRST female managers. The unwelcome and offensive conduct by co-drivers and lead drivers generally occurred on the road in remote locations, not in CRST's corporate offices.

These cold statistics do not tell the entire story. The 146 female drivers variously suffered physical, mental and/or emotional abuse at the hands of their male co-drivers and lead drivers. Among other things, their coworkers subjected them to (1) sexually charged comments; (2) verbal abuse; (3) pornography; (4) graphic stories about sex, including the rape of a child; (5) propositions for sex;

(6) urination;[12] (7) exposed penises; (8) masturbation; (9) offensive touching, including unwanted "brushing up," kissing, hugging and patting; (10) crawling into women's bunks uninvited; (11) physical abuse, including punching, kicking, grabbing, fondling and rape; (12) theft of underwear; (13) threats of reprisal if the women did not accede to their sexual demands, including threats that trainees would not graduate to co-driver status; (14) ordering women off of the truck; (15) tossing their belongings out of the cab; and (16) parking the tractor in isolated or otherwise "bad" areas.

8. CRST's responses to specific situations

Much less clear is (1) the extent to which the 146 women informed CRST about the sexual harassment they suffered, e.g., the timeliness and breadth of their complaints in relation to the allegedly offensive conduct to which the women were subjected; and (2) CRST's responses to each complaint. The parties have not compiled this evidence in any meaningful way for the court. After reading thousands of pages of deposition testimony and other documents in conjunction with the parties' Local Rule 56 individual statements of material fact,[13] the court is only able to draw the following, mostly

12. Although urination is not "clearly sexual in nature" and lacks "explicit sexual overtones," the sight of it may nonetheless form the basis for a hostile work environment sexual harassment claim. Hall, 842 F.2d at 1014.

13. For example, the EEOC's appendix is over 1,300 pages long. Many of the pages contain four "scrunched" deposition pages.

general conclusions about CRST's responses to its female drivers' complaints of sexual harassment:

- CRST investigated at least 172 complaints of sexual harassment between January 1, 2005 and October 15, 2008. The vast majority of CRST's investigations did not result in any determination on the part of the Human Resources Department as to whether sexual harassment actually occurred. When deciding whether sexual harassment allegations were true, CRST was often faced with the classic "he said/she said" situation.

- At least one male driver was fired after he admitted to sexually harassing a female coworker. Further, CRST barred dozens of other male drivers from driving with women. This "no females designation" did not alter the male drivers' rates of pay. On occasion CRST inadvertently allowed a driver with "no females designation" to drive with women.

- In many instances CRST's dispatchers responded to female drivers' complaints of sexual harassment with compassion and in compliance with CRST's policy against sexual harassment. Dispatchers offered and/or made arrangements to extricate drivers from their tractors and harassers as soon as possible. Dispatchers offered to pay or paid for expenses such as travel, lodging and medical care after extrication. Dispatchers reassigned female drivers to new trainers or co-drivers. Many of the women who testified in this case did not fault

CRST or its dispatchers for the handling of their complaints of sexual harassment.

- Some female drivers opted to remain in their tractors with their harassers while CRST tried to help them. These female drivers apparently prioritized their finances over possible further exposure to sexual harassment; under the split-mileage rate and CRST's other policies, all drivers had a financial incentive to remain on their tractors and keep them moving. Rather than extricate complainants from their tractors as soon as possible, some dispatchers agreed to re-route the female drivers' tractors or to make other appropriate, delayed arrangements so long as the female driver was willing and not in imminent physical danger.

- Some of CRST's dispatchers and other managers violated CRST's policy against sexual harassment. For example, some dispatchers occasionally failed to report complaints of sexual harassment to the Human Resources Department. They tried to remedy situations themselves or, out of laziness or negligence, shifted the burden to the complainant to pursue the matter with higher-level management. Conversely, CRST's Human Resources Department often failed to communicate with complainants about the status of their sexual harassment complaints and whether CRST imposed discipline upon the accused.

- On occasion CRST's dispatchers failed to protect female drivers from sexual harassment. The court cannot detect any pattern to the dispatchers' failings; the circumstances surrounding each case vary widely. Some dispatchers were lazy and "punted" the complainants to other dispatchers. Some dispatchers did not believe some of the allegations of sexual harassment and for this reason failed to make appropriate arrangements to extricate the women from their tractors. (At times skepticism filtered up into the Human Resources Department; when one woman told Mr. Barnes and Ms. Oetken that a male driver raped her, Mr. Barnes rolled his eyes and asked rhetorically: "So how much is this going to cost?" Pl. App'x at 377.) Other times dispatchers encouraged complainants to tolerate the harassment until they delivered their cargo at its intended destination. Sometimes dispatchers pointed out (1) it might take CRST longer to reassign the alleged harasser than it would for the team to deliver the cargo; (2) drivers are not paid while waiting for reassignments; and (3) drivers who leave their tractors without permission from CRST are subject to termination for "abandonment." On rare occasions dispatchers affirmatively thwarted the female drivers' complaints of sexual harassment. For example, one female driver told her dispatcher that her co-driver forced her to perform oral sex on him. The dispatcher, a friend of the co-driver, failed to respond to her complaint. Another dispatcher betrayed a female driver and informed her harasser of her complaint.

- CRST does not keep track of drivers' complaints about dispatchers failing to respond appropriately to sexual harassment complaints. CRST has never fired a dispatcher for mishandling a driver's complaint of sexual harassment.

D. Arguments

1. Motion

In the Motion, CRST asks the court to dismiss the EEOC's "pattern or practice claim." CRST contends that the EEOC has not met its burden under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56 and Celotex to present sufficient evidence in support of such claim. Specifically, CRST posits a reasonably jury could not find "(1) that CRST's everyday workplace is permeated with sexual harassment so severe or pervasive that it alters the terms of employment of its female drivers; or (2) that CRST's management has a policy of tolerating an atmosphere of severe or pervasive sexual harassment throughout the workplace." Def.'s Br. at 4. CRST proceeds on the assumption that lead drivers are coworkers, not supervisors.

As a threshold matter, CRST points out that the EEOC "elected to offer no affirmative expert evidence, statistical or otherwise, in support of its claims" and thus "attempt[s] to meet its imposing affirmative burden by citing what it contends are 'too many' complaints of sexual harassment by CRST's female drivers without putting any of its evidence into a statistically meaningful context." Id. at 5. CRST contends that the EEOC only "offer[s] episodic evidence contending that CRST management should be doing a better job of preventing sexual harassment complaints, investigating them, disciplining offenders, helping alleged victims, training drivers about sexual harassment, and following its own policies and procedures." Id. In other words, > instead of providing evidence of a discriminatory corporate policy or intentionally discriminatory decisions by CRST's officers and directors, [the] EEOC rests its case against CRST on ad hoc individual claims that amount to neither a pattern nor a practice. An intentional company-wide policy tolerating all pervasive sexual harassment cannot justifiably be inferred simply from the number of individual claims that [the] EEOC is pursuing in this case.

Id. at 11. To rebut this "episodic evidence," id. at 5, CRST points the court to its own expert evidence (set forth in Part IV.B.7 supra), which establishes that the incidence of sexual harassment complaints among CRST's female drivers is very low--regardless of whether such complaints are viewed in relation to the total number of female employees, the total number of male-female driver teams, the total number of trips taken or the total number of miles traveled.

CRST stresses that it is undisputed that it has a longstanding, official policy against sexual harassment. CRST actively enforces this policy. CRST points to its repeated and myriad efforts to train its employees that sexual harassment is wrong and that CRST does not tolerate it. CRST also points out that it provides its employees with many different avenues to report sexual harassment. Each CRST administrator and manager has testified that CRST does not tolerate sexual harassment in the workplace and affirmatively seeks to root it out. While CRST does not dispute that the EEOC may have presented evidence of isolated individual incidents of sexual harassment and uncovered some of the failings of its policies and procedures, the EEOC has not shown, in the words of the Supreme Court, that it is CRST's "standard operating procedure" to tolerate the sexual harassment of its female drivers. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336). CRST accuses the EEOC of doing little more than "second guessing CRST's existing policy and enforcement procedures against sexual harassment." Def.'s Br. at 5.

CRST points out that, unlike every other case in which a court found sufficient facts for a jury to infer an employer had a pattern or practice of unlawful employment discrimination, in this case there is comparatively little evidence--statistical or otherwise--of unlawful discrimination. The incidence of unlawful discrimination pales in comparison to other cases; in Teamsters, for example, the United States presented stunning evidence that the defendant-company employed virtually no members of certain races in preferred jobs. The company's inability to rebut the inference of discrimination resulted from "'the inexorable zero.'" Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 342 n.23 (citation omitted).

CRST stresses that its "workplace" is widely dispersed. CRST argues this fact is a special consideration for the court in deciding whether CRST has engaged in a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment. CRST argues:

> Here, the workplace is not a single facility in which many women employees may be subjected to harassment by the same group of male employees in the same manner for an indefinite period. Instead, CRST's operations involve two-person teams driving trucks far removed from management's ability to observe or control interpersonal conduct. CRST cannot learn or act upon a complaint of sexual harassment from a female driver unless and until she first reports it.

Id. at 12-13. CRST contends that this case is "closest" to EEOC v. Carrols Corp., No. 5:98-CV-1772, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, 2005 WL 928634 (N.D.N.Y. Apr. 20, 2005) (dismissing pattern or practice claim against employer where alleged harassment occurred at 206 different Burger King restaurants) and factually distinguishable from other cases involving allegations of unified workplaces with widespread, pervasive sexual harassment of which the employer must have been aware, including Jenson, Mitsubishi and Dial.

2. Resistance

The EEOC resists the Motion in its entirety. The EEOC alleges that, "[s]ince at least 1997, CRST has tolerated a pattern or practice of sexual harassment of its female truck drivers." Brief in Support of Resistance ("Pl.'s Br.") (docket no. 168-1), at 4. In response to a pending motion the EEOC adopts an even wider view; proceeding on the premise that there is no statute of limitations for "pattern or practice claims" (under either §§ 706 or 707), the EEOC promises at trial "to show that the pattern or practice which existed between January 1, 2005 and the present extended back indefinitely." Lim. Br. at 6. The EEOC apparently intends to seek relief for women sexually harassed as early as 1997 and who have not worked at the company for over ten years. See id. ("EEOC has always told CRST that it intends to prove the pattern for a period as far back as the evidence warrants.").

The EEOC accuses CRST of "treat[ing] sex harassment as nothing more than a distraction from the business of moving freight." Pl. Br. at 6. The EEOC recounts female drivers' individual accounts of sexual harassment over the years. Characterizing lead drivers as the trainees' "supervisors" for purposes of Title VII, the EEOC concludes that "CRST is vicariously liable for sexual harassment perpetrated by its trainers, subject to an affirmative defense in cases where the harassment did not culminate in tangible employment action[.]" Id. at 10 (referencing Faragher-Ellerth doctrine).

The EEOC dismisses CRST's criticism that it has not presented expert testimony or sophisticated statistical evidence to show a pattern or practice of sexual harassment at CRST. The EEOC opines that "[i]t is not essential that a pattern or practice be supported by statistical proof[.]" Id. at 12. In any event, the EEOC states that simple math (a numeral tally of the evidence of incidence of complaints of harassment) shows that "[t]he undisputed evidence demonstrates that a minimum of 254 women, or 9.4 percent of all of CRST's female drivers, have complained of sexual harassment by their trainers or co-drivers" and "the harassment they experienced was severe or pervasive." Id. (emphasis in original).

The EEOC criticizes CRST's sexual harassment policy as deficient. Although the EEOC falls short of calling the policy a ruse to hide discrimination, it argues:

> CRST has not changed its policy of sex harassment for drivers for many years. . . . . [T]he policy itself is evidence of CRST's neglect. It does not identify most of the often-repeated behaviors that violate it, including trainers seeking sex in exchange for a passing grade, men assaulting women, men urinating into containers in view of women, men exposing themselves to women, and masturbation. It does not give women the name of a person to contact for complaints. It does not say what to do when a woman is unable to complain because of the known roadblocks to reporting: fear of the trainer or co-driver, lack of Qualcomm training, lack of a cell phone, or off-hours unavailability of CRST personnel. It does not state who the woman's "supervisor" is, or state that the trainer is not her supervisor. It does not say whether and when a woman may be removed > from the truck if she is uncomfortable due to a sexual advance or other sexual misconduct. And it does not say to anyone--trainers, trainees, or fleet managers--that sexual harassment should "never happen[.]"

Id. at 18-19 (citations omitted).

The EEOC also calls into question CRST's sexual harassment training. The EEOC opines that CRST's trainings are too brief, not presented seriously and not repeated enough. The EEOC points out that drivers do not receive annual sexual harassment training after their orientations, and CRST only introduced annual training for managers in the last few years.

The EEOC contends that CRST fails to protect its female drivers, as its supervisors' failures to follow the policy on all occasions attests. The EEOC also points out that nearly all of CRST's investigations result in no factual finding as to whether sexual harassment in fact occurred. Further, CRST "does not impose any meaningful discipline on those accused of sexual harassment." Id. at 23. The EEOC points out that, "[o]f the 157 complaints of sexual harassment made by women . . . only 69, or 44%, resulted in a designation of [sic] that the male harasser should not drive with women in the future." Id. The EEOC concludes that CRST has a "nod/wink effort at discipline [that] sends a message to harassers that they may freely harass and are likely to get away with it, given the intrinsically coercive atmosphere on the truck, and even if it is reported, they lose nothing." Id. The EEOC notes that CRST does not actively monitor its "no females" designation and contends the firing of only one male driver for sexual harassment over the years "shows that it is nearly impossible to get fired for sex harassment." Id. at 23-24. The EEOC concludes that CRST is aware that harassment is routine but does not take action to decrease its incidence.

At bottom, the EEOC alleges CRST tolerates sexual harassment for profit. The EEOC summarizes its argument as follows:

> CRST knows that its female drivers are sexually assaulted, propositioned, groped, and exposed to masturbation with frightening frequency and regularity. It has not taken action to decrease the frequency by working to prevent their occurrence or by disciplining the perpetrators. Instead, it concludes that its sexual harassment policy is successful because so many women follow the company's complaint procedure and make complaints of sexual harassment. In other words, CRST's policy works because so many women are being sexually harassed. The result of CRST's failure to recognize that a large number of complaints indicates that it has a sexual harassment problem is predictable and widespread. Nearly one out of every ten female drivers who gets on a truck with a male driver at CRST will complain of being sexually harassed. Whether that is sufficient to declare CRST's policy and practice a pattern or practice of discrimination under Title VII should be for the finder of fact to determine.

3. Reply

In its Reply, CRST repeats many of the arguments in its Motion. Among other things, CRST also accuses the EEOC of (1) grossly distorting the evidence before the court by misstating the deposition testimony of a small number of class members; (2) inappropriately relying on the complaints of the 99 "class members" whom it failed to produce for deposition to inflate the incidence of harassment; (3) nitpicking and quibbling with alleged deficiencies in its sexual harassment policies and procedures without citing any legal authority therefor; and (4) attempting to micro-manage its business.

E. Analysis

For the reasons set forth in CRST's Motion and Reply, the court holds that the EEOC has presented insufficient evidence to show that CRST has engaged in a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment of its female drivers. Based upon the record presently before the court, a reasonable jury could not find that it is CRST's "standard operating procedure" to tolerate sexual harassment. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336. To be certain, the EEOC has presented the court with anecdotal evidence that some of CRST's managers occasionally failed to deal appropriately with female drivers' complaints of sexual harassment over the years. While this may subject CRST to liability as to individual women at trial, the EEOC has not presented sufficient evidence to show that tolerating sexual harassment was "the regular rather than the unusual practice" at CRST. Id. The EEOC is not entitled to Jenson II's modified burden-shifting framework.

It is undisputed that tolerating sexual harassment is not CRST's official policy. To the contrary, at all relevant times CRST has had a facially valid anti-sexual harassment policy, which it distributed to its employees. "Distribution of a valid [anti-sexual harassment policy] provides compelling . . . proof of preventing sexual harassment." Brenneman v. Famous Dave's of Am., Inc., 507 F.3d 1139, 1145 (8th Cir. 2007). Further, CRST ensured its employees received specific training on its anti-sexual harassment policy. See id. (characterizing as "most important[]" the fact an employee "received training specifically about [an anti-sexual harassment] policy"). CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy makes clear that sexual harassment will not be tolerated in CRST's workplaces. Further, it is specific and detailed and provides potential complainants with multiple avenues to report sexual harassment. All of these undisputed facts weigh against a finding that it is CRST's standard operating procedure to tolerate sexual harassment of its female drivers. See, e.g., id.; Shaw v. AutoZone, Inc., 180 F.3d 806, 811-12 (7th Cir. 1999) (lauding an employer's anti-sexual harassment policy, which "made clear [the employer's] stand that sexual harassment will not be tolerated, . . . provided for multiple mechanisms for the prompt resolution of complaints" and was "both specific and detailed").

The EEOC's criticisms of CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy are not well-taken. The EEOC devotes nearly eight pages of its Resistance to nitpick various aspects of CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy and practices. For example, the EEOC faults one written version of CRST's policy because it fails to state with specificity that "seeking sex in exchange for a passing grade" and "men exposing themselves to women" constitute sexual harassment. The problem with the EEOC's argument--apart from the fact that it should be obvious to any reasonable person that "seeking sex in exchange for a passing grade" and "men exposing themselves to women" constitute sexual harassment--is that the EEOC does not cite a single case, statute or other legal authority in any of the eight pages of argument. To show a pattern or practice of unlawful employment practices, the EEOC must do more than quibble with alleged deficiencies in CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy and practices. It must cite legal authority.

The incidence of sexual harassment against CRST's female drivers--no more than 5.4% of the total 2,701 female drivers employed by CRST who were teamed with at least one male driver during the relevant period, 2.7% of all female/male teams, 0.8% of the trips taken, 0.9% of all days driven or 0.8% of all the miles driven[14]--is not so high as to lead to a reasonable inference that CRST's anti-sexual harassment policies and practices are a ruse to hide a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment.

14. These are conservative estimates made in the EEOC's favor. The percentages set forth in Part IV.C.7 supra will decrease (1) if the court or the jury later determines that some of the women who have testified in this case did not experience severe or pervasive sexual harassment or (2) if the court adopts the EEOC's contention that § 706 lacks a statute of limitations and the pattern or practice began in 1997 instead of 2005. Cf. Craik, 731 F.2d at 481 (affirming district court's finding that class-wide sexual harassment did not exist when plaintiffs proved "about 50 incidents which occurred over a ten-year period"). The court notes that the court in Carrols did not make these assumptions in the EEOC's favor but nonetheless granted summary judgment in the defendant-employer's favor. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, 2005 WL 928634, at *4-*5.

Appendix O

There is insufficient admissible evidence in the record for a reasonable jury to find it was standard operating procedure at CRST to tolerate sexual harassment. Joens, 354 F.3d at 940 (quoting Dhyne, 184 F.3d at 987). The incidence of unlawful employment activity is a far cry from Teamsters and its "inexorable zero." 431 U.S. at 342 n.23 (citation omitted).

The EEOC has not presented the court with any expert evidence, statistics or legal authority to support its argument that there is so much sexual harassment of CRST's female drivers that CRST must tolerate sexual harassment. Surprisingly, the EEOC has not offered any of its own statistical or expert evidence in this case; the Supreme Court and the various circuit courts of appeals have long recognized that such evidence is usually an important component of proof in a pattern or practice case. See, e.g., Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339 ("[O]ur cases make it unmistakably clear that '[s]tatistical analyses have served and will continue to serve an important role' in cases in which the existence of discrimination is a disputed issue." (Citations omitted.)); Catlett, 828 F.2d at 1266 (reiterating that statistical evidence was important because it "serve[d] to reinforce the suggestion that these discriminatory incidents were not isolated or sporadic but were representative of Missouri's standard operating procedure"); Craik, 731 F.2d at 470 (stating that in pattern or practice cases the plaintiff "[n]ormally" will offer statistical evidence); EEOC v. Joe's Stone Crab, Inc., 220 F.3d 1263, 1274 (11th Cir. 2000) ("[I]n a pattern or practice case, the plaintiff must prove, normally through a combination of statistics and anecdotes, that discrimination is the company's 'standard operating procedure.'"); Jenson II, 824 F. Supp. 874-88 (relying heavily on plaintiff's expert testimony).

The court does not suggest that statistical evidence is necessary to prove a pattern or practice claim. "Either [statistical or anecdotal evidence recounting specific instances of discrimination] alone may be sufficient to establish a pattern or practice of discrimination." Catlett, 828 F.2d at 1265. In Teamsters, the Supreme Court further cautioned that "statistics are not irrefutable; they come in infinite variety and, like any other kind of evidence, they may be rebutted. In short, their usefulness depends on all the surrounding facts and circumstances." 431 U.S. at 340. There may yet be truth in Mark Twain's observation that "[t]here are three kinds of lies: lies, damned lies, and statistics"; the problem is that the EEOC has not given the court any evidence to disprove CRST's statistical evidence. But the EEOC may not turn Rule 56 and Celotex on their heads and simply piggyback on CRST's evidence.[15] In this regard the EEOC's argument boils down to little more than its bald assertions that CRST's business model is "intrinsically coercive" and the incidence of sexual harassment among CRST's female drivers is shockingly high. Yet attorney argument is not evidence, Exeter Bancorp., Inc. v. Kemper Secs. Group, Inc., 58 F.3d 1306, 1312 n. 5 (8th Cir. 1995) (reiterating that statements of counsel are not evidence and will not carry the day on a motion), and "[e]vidence, not contentions, avoids summary judgment." Reasonover, 447 F.3d at 578.

15. Making matters worse, the EEOC attempts to inflate CRST's own evidence by asking the court to consider inadmissible complaints of sexual harassment.

Appendix O

It is important to remember that CRST's lead drivers were the trainees' coworkers, not their supervisors. It is true the EEOC presented anecdotal evidence to show CRST almost exclusively relied upon the observations of lead drivers when deciding whether to promote trainees to co-driver status. For example, Mr. Barnes informally characterized the relationship between lead drivers and trainees during EEOC administrative proceedings as "really no different than the role of supervisors in other industries and organizations." Pl.'s App'x at 831. The EEOC also presented anecdotal evidence to show some trainees believed their lead drivers possessed supervisory status. Notwithstanding such anecdotal evidence, it is undisputed that--in fact--final authority to hire, fire, promote, demote or reassign trainees did not rest with lead drivers. Absent proof such authority rested with lead drivers, lead drivers are not "supervisors" for purposes of Title VII. See Merritt v. Albemarle Corp., 496 F.3d 880, 883-84 (8th Cir. 2007) ("[T]o be considered a supervisor, the alleged harasser must have had the power . . . to take tangible employment action against the victim, such as the authority to hire, fire, promote, or reassign to significantly different duties." (Citation omitted.)). Indeed, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals explicitly rejected the EEOC's broad interpretation of supervisory status in a similar case. See, e.g., Weyers v. Lear Operations Corp., 359 F.3d 1049, 1056-57 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that a "team leader" with the authority "to assign employees to particular tasks" was not a supervisor and specifically rejecting the EEOC's broader interpretation of supervisory status). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has also indicated that "apparent authority would be an insufficient basis to support a finding of supervisor status." Id. at 1057 n.7 (citing Todd v. Ortho Biotech, Inc., 175 F.3d 595, 598 (8th Cir. 1999)). The court may not hold CRST strictly liable for the conduct of its lead drivers or co-drivers.

The EEOC has presented the court with anecdotal evidence to show that some members of CRST's management occasionally violated CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy by failing to respond appropriately to sexual harassment in the workplace. (Those facts are set forth in Part IV.C supra and need not be repeated here.) However, the EEOC has not compiled the failings of CRST's managers in any meaningful way to show that CRST has a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment in its workplace. Absent such initiative on the part of the EEOC, there is nothing in the record which a reasonable jury might cobble together to show these failures were part of a pattern or a practice of tolerating sexual harassment instead of merely isolated or sporadic failures over the course of four (or perhaps twelve) years.

This case is manifestly unlike Jenson II. Apart from the EEOC's failure to present expert statistical evidence of, for example, "sex stereotyping" and its failure to compile the evidence in a meaningful fashion for the court, there is simply no evidence in the record that men occupied virtually every supervisory and managerial position and created a "sexualized environment" for their female subordinates. 824 F. Supp. at 885. There is no evidence women worked in a largely unified work environment in which "[v]irtually all of the relevant testimony and evidence indicates that male employees, [including first-line supervisors,] felt free to and did exhibit sexually-focused material anywhere they chose." Id. at 880. There is no evidence CRST failed to establish a system for processing sexual harassment complaints. CRST assigned members of its management the responsibility to curtail sexual harassment in the workplace and has made repeated efforts to communicate with its employees that sexual harassment is wrong.

The EEOC excoriates CRST's Human Resources Department for failing to make formal findings of fact and, based upon such findings, discipline harassers. The EEOC's argument ignores reality and settled Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals case law. The EEOC's argument ignores reality by confusing CRST with a court or some other body empowered by law to make such findings. Unlike a court or administrative organization such as the EEOC, CRST's Human Resources Department does not possess the power to compel sworn testimony under penalty of perjury. It should come as no surprise to the EEOC, then, that CRST's investigations do not always produce sufficient information upon which to base a decision as important as deciding whether an employee should be fired for misconduct. Many adjudicative bodies, including the EEOC, who possess such powers are themselves unable to reach conclusions of ultimate fact in every case.

The EEOC's argument ignores settled Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals case law. "[T]here is no 'requirement that the employer credit uncorroborated statements the complainant makes if they are disputed by the alleged harasser.'" Adams, 538 F.3d at 930 (citation omitted)).

While the court must assume all of the female drivers' allegations to be true for purposes of Rule 56, it does not follow that CRST's dispatchers or other managers were required to have done the same if and when those women reported their allegations in accordance with CRST's anti-sexual harassment policy. Because of the relatively unique nature of CRST's "workplace," nearly every complaint of sexual harassment creates the classic "he said/she said" situation. Even if CRST's Human Resources Department were a court or other adjudicative body, justice is due to the accuser and the accused. Snyder v. Massachusetts, 291 U.S. 97, 122, 54 S. Ct. 330, 78 L. Ed. 674 (1934) (Cardozo, J.). As it is, it appears to be CRST's policy and usual practice to bar alleged harassers from driving with women without making formal factual findings.

Of the reported pattern or practice cases decided at the summary judgment stage, this case is most similar to EEOC v. Carrols Corporation, No. 5:98-CV-1772, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, 2005 WL 928634 (N.D.N.Y. Apr. 20, 2005). In Carrols, The EEOC brought a pattern or practice hostile work environment sexual harassment case[16] against an employer who also had a widely dispersed "workplace"--the employer owned and operated 350 Burger King restaurants in sixteen states. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, 2005 WL 928634, at * 1. The district court set forth the following criteria for determining whether it was the employer's "standard operating procedure" to tolerate sexual harassment:

> Neither statute nor case law provides a > definitive list of the relevant circumstances that a court should consider. However, in a particular case, the nature of the plaintiff's offered proof and the nature of the defendant's business operations will indicate that certain criteria are relevant.

16. The court notes that in Carrols the EEOC filed suit under both §§ 706 and 707.

> [Here,] the Court must compare the number of allegations to the total number of Defendants' female employees during the relevant period. The Court must also consider the number of years over which the allegations arose. Furthermore, the Court must examine certain aspects of the allegations and Defendant's workplace that are relevant to the issue of how the alleged conduct would affect the reasonable woman, e.g. whether the alleged harasser was a supervisory employee, whether the alleged harasser was likely to remain in Defendant's employ for a significant period of time, and whether the alleged victim was aware of conditions in Defendant's restaurants outside of the one in which she worked.

The district court then applied these criteria to the facts before it in the summary judgment record. First, turning to the facts, the district court held that, at most, a reasonable jury could find 333 of 90,835 employees at a total of 206 distinct restaurants had suffered sexual harassment. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, [WL] at *4.

This amounted to .367% of the women the defendant had employed during such time-frame. Id. Second, the district court found that the harassment occurred over an eight-year period. Third, the district court pointed out that the employer had high turnover and most of its female employees did not work at more than one restaurant. Id. As a consequence, the district court observed:

> Plaintiff . . . argues that a statistical analysis of its submissions is misleading because multiple discrete incidents of sexual harassment may result in a cumulative level of hostility in the work environment greater than that indicated merely by counting the incidents. However, the strength of this argument depends upon whether the alleged victims are aware of the discrete incidents. Certainly a woman who has never directly been subjected to harassing conduct, but who is aware that other female co-workers have been so subjected, may reasonably regard her work environment as hostile. However, in the instant case, Plaintiff's submission indicate[s] that most of Defendant's female employees did not work at more than one restaurant. Consequently, they knew little of Defendant's policies and practices and the experiences of Defendant's employees beyond what they saw in their individual restaurants. Therefore, the multiplying effect of incidents of sexual harassment is substantially weaker in this case than it is in cases involving more unified work environments and workforces.

Id.; see also Jones v. Flagship Int'l, 793 F.2d 714, 721 n.7 (5th Cir. 1986) (cited with approval in Hall, 842 F.2d at 1015, for the proposition that "incidents of sexual harassment reported by other females bear on plaintiff's claim only if there is evidence that incidents affected plaintiff's psychological well-being")). Fourth, the district court noted that 69 of the alleged incidents of sexual harassment involved non-supervisory employees and another 53 against low-level supervisors. Id. Fifth, the district court pointed out that, whereas the EEOC had failed to compile evidence to establish the number of harassers still in the defendant's employ, the defendant had affirmatively presented evidence to show it had fired, suspended or otherwise disciplined dozens of alleged harassers. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, [WL] at *5.

The district court rejected the EEOC's argument that statistical evidence in a sexual harassment pattern or practice case was misleading. 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8337, [WL] at *4. Although the district court conceded it was unable to "articulate a specific threshold for the number of claims that is necessary to establish a pattern or practice of sexual harassment," the district court pointed out that not "even a substantial minority of Defendant's female employees experience harassment." Id. The court district held that the EEOC's evidence "f[e]ll well short of what is required" and granted the employer's motion for summary judgment as to the EEOC's pattern or practice claims of sexual harassment. Id. (emphasis added).[17]

17. Carrols is still pending before the district court more than a decade after the EEOC filed it.

The same analysis applies with equal--if not greater force--here. The EEOC has presented the court with insufficient evidence to survive summary judgment on its "pattern or practice claim." While the incidence of sexual harassment is apparently higher here than in Carrols, not even a substantial minority of Defendant's female employees experienced harassment. Further, apparently unlike the Defendant in Carrols, this defendant has adopted policies and procedures to forestall harassment. This is not a case of "systemic, company-wide discrimination" or "an objectively verifiable policy or practice of discrimination by a private employer against its employees." Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. at 1070.

In any event, application of the Teamsters burden-shifting framework as modified by Jenson II would appear to present special difficulties in the instant case. Burden shifting in pattern and practice cases is justified in large part upon the premise that "[p]resumptions shifting the burden of proof are often created to reflect judicial evaluations of probabilities and to conform with a party's superior access to the proof." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 359. Here, CRST does not operate a unified workplace. Its workplaces are largely the cabs of hundreds upon hundreds of semi-truck tractors. As a consequence, there is little reason to assume all allegedly aggrieved persons were subjected to the same harm, just as a court might presume in the mine-run case with a unified workplace. Cf. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360 & n.45 (appearing to recognize that the burden-shifting paradigm might not be appropriate in all pattern or practice cases if the determination at the liability phase did not "create a greater likelihood that any single decision was a component of the overall pattern"); Craik, 731 F.2d at 471 n.9 (discussing the theoretical underpinning of the burden of persuasion shift in Teamsters). There is even less reason to assume that CRST is in a superior position to gauge the subjective experience of each female driver than the female driver herself. Cf. Int'l Profit Assocs., 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069, at *15 ("[E]ach individual claimant should have knowledge of the specific harassment she experienced . . . . [S]hifting the burden . . . does not make sense under Teamsters" in a sexual harassment case.)).

Accordingly, the court holds that the EEOC has not established a pattern or practice of tolerating sexual harassment. Therefore, the EEOC will not be permitted to avail itself of the Jenson II burden-shifting framework at trial. Nothing in this opinion, however, should be construed as a final ruling on the individual claims of sexual harassment that the EEOC presses in this action. At trial, the EEOC may be able to prove CRST is liable for sexual harassment as to individuals and obtain the equitable and other relief it seeks on their behalf. Cf. Catlett, 828 F.2d at 1265 ("[A] class claim may fail despite proof of discrimination against one or more individuals[.]").

V. CONCLUSION

The Motion (docket no. 150) is GRANTED. To the extent that the EEOC asserts a "pattern or practice claim" in this litigation against CRST, such claim is DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE. The EEOC shall pay CRST's ordinary costs. CRST may file its request for costs 10 court days after the disposition of the entire case.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

The Extent of Sexual Harassment at CRST

271. CRST received at least the following number of complaints of sex harassment by female drivers against males:

2005: 54 complaints

2006: 32 complaints

2007: 49 complaints

2008 (through October 15): 47 complaints

(CRST Second Supplemental Answers to EEOC's Second Set of Interrogatories, 02-23-09, EEOC P/P App. 611-624)

Based on these numbers, CRST had a total of 182 complaints of sex harassment by female drivers against males during this period, which constitutes 6.7% of all women driving with men. (Campion Dec. ¶8, EEOC P/P App. 1363-1364.)

RESPONSE: Admitted.

272. CRST listed 172 complaints of sexual harassment on its Positive Work Environment Chart ("PWE Chart") for the period from December 14, 2004 to October 13, 2008. (CRST First Supplemental answers to EEOC First Interrogatories, 01-15-09, EEOC P/P App. 605-610; PWE Chart, EEOC P/P App. 1191-1195.)

RESPONSE: Admitted.

273. Of the 172 complaints identified above, 157 of them were received between January 1, 2005 and October 15, 2008, and were made by a female driver against a male driver. (PWE Chart, EEOC P/P App. 1191-1195.)

RESPONSE: Admitted.

278. CRST documents indicate that additional women were sexually harassed, although they were not included on the PWE Chart, and were not the subject of an investigation. (See, Doc. No. CRST 159782, EEOC P/P App. 1194; Doc. No. CRST 189964, EEOC P/P App. 1195.)

RESPONSE: Admitted.

RESPONSE: EEOC's statements that the following class members reported similar types of mistreatment are not supported by the materials cited by EEOC in their respective subparagraphs of paragraph 280 and therefore must be disregarded for the following reasons:

a. Women exposed to male nudity:

1. Kristi Allen: Allen stated that McCauley's private areas were covered with a blanket and though "[she] could see that he didn't have any clothes on, [she] didn't actually see anything." Allen Dep. 62, CRST App. 0135.

3. Marie Foster: Castell told Foster he sleeps naked. Foster Dep. 93-96, EEOC P/P App. 204.

6. Lola Hutton: Brady had his shirt off. Hutton Dep. 66-67, EEOC P/P App. 405.

7. Diane Johnson: On two occasions, Johnson saw Tyrell with just his underwear on. Johnson Dep. 57, CRST App. 1560.

9. Madeline Lovins: After the first week, Smith drove with his shirt off. Lovins Dep. 39, CRST App. 1677.

10. Margaret McCain: Ward told her he slept in the nude and not to open the curtains, but there is no indication that she was exposed to him naked. McCain Dep. 36-37, CRST App. 1755.

b. Men urinating in front of women:

5. Denise Desonier: Desonier did not testify that he urinated in front of her. See Desonier Dep. 52-53, CRST App. 0857.

6. Maybi Fernandez Fabre: Fernandez Fabre described how she herself urinated on the truck, but there is no indication that she was exposed to Mortenson urinating. Fernandez Fabre Dep. 41-43, 50-51, CRST App. 0977-0978, 0980.

7. Martha Griffin: Griffin did not testify that he urinated in front of her. See Griffin Dep. 80-89, CRST App. 1298.

14. Rachel Tucker. Tucker did not testify that James urinated in front of her. See Tucker Dep. 53-54, CRST App. 3218-3219.

15. Rebecca Waisr: Waisr did not testify that a male urinated in front of her. Waisr Dep. 74, CRST App. 3285.

c. Men masturbating in trucks:

9. Victoria High: High did not want to sit on his bunk because "every time he'd get himself off he'd put it in a sock and keep it in the corner of the bed." High Dep. 31, EEOC P/P App. 271.

d. Men sexually assaulting women, including jumping on top of them, punching/kicking them, and grabbing/fondling them:

9. Denise Desonier: Desonier stated that Tim Redecker, her second trainer, smacked her in the head, which she stated was "inappropriate." Desonier Dep. 51-52, CRST App. 0857. Further, Desonier did not claim that Redecker sexually harassed her; her only accused harasser was Brian Mallory. Desonier Dep. 51, CRST App. 0857.

10. Barbara Dixon: Dixon woke up naked and looked for her clothes. Dixon Dep. 26-27, EEOC P/P App. 178.

21. Tequila Jackson: Jackson did not testify that any physical touching occurred. Jackson Dep. 87, EEOC P/P App. 434.

28. Darlene Miller: The pages cited do not support the statement that Miller was sexually assaulted. Miller stated that she and Mowerson started arguing and he became bossy. Miller Dep. 66, CRST App. 1902. They began fighting on the truck. Id. Miller hit Mowerson, but he never hit her back. Id.

33. Tammy Pile: When Pile was asked if she claimed that there was any sex-based harassment of Pile by Lovendahl during the 18 days they were on the truck together, Pile said "no." Pile Dep. 62, CRST App. 2353.

34. Janet Ranney: Ranney testified that "there was no physical disgusting things that happened with him." Ranney Dep. 110, CRST App. 2522.

39. Gloria South: Garant threw a box of condoms into her lap. South Dep. 59-60, EEOC P/P App. 507. Garant hit the gas pedal and South hit her head on the sleeper wall. Id. at 78-79, EEOC P/P App. 512.

e. Men engaging in other offensive sex-based touching, including unwanted brushing against them, hugging, and patting:

4. Bonnie Batyik: Buckner "went to swing and hit [her]." Batyik Dep. 36, CRST App. 0305. Batyick said that "[i]nstead of hitting [her], he hit the door or window." Id. Batyik does not testify that there was physical touching.

15. Catherine Coronado: Coronado stated that Bosworth made comments about how big his penis was and removed his false teeth and made movements of his tongue simulating oral sex. Coronodo Dep. 28-29, CRST App. 0763. Coronado does not testify that there was physical touching.

24. Sylvia Griffith: Griffith stated that "[w]hen [she] was sleeping, [she could] feel [Mejri] staring at [her]." Griffith Dep. 39, CRST App. 1143. Griffith testified that Mejri did not engage in any other behavior that Griffith felt was sexual or inappropriate. Id. at 40, CRST App. 1143.

25. Wanda Hasbell: Hasbell did not indicate any touching. "Only one time did he reach over and try to put his hands on me and I said, don't ever touch." Hasbell Dep. 68, EEOC P/P App. 257.

52. Ramona Villereal: DeJong asked Villereal to give other drivers a peep show. Villereal does not testify to any touching. Villeareal Dep. 64-67, CRST Supp. App. 3492-3493.

54. Tiani Warden-Thompson: Warden-Thompson did not mention that Evans ever touched her. See Warden-Thompson Dep. 66, CRST App. 3320.

f. Men propositioning women for sex:

7. Stacy Barager: Barager stated that Williamson told her that she could flash him if she felt like it. Barager Dep. 78, CRST App. 0240. Barager testified that Williamson said that "if he wanted a piece of ass, basically, that he would take it." Id. at 78-79, CRST App. 0240.

12. Peggy Blake: Blake testified that, while she was lying on the top bunk and Lombard was on the bottom bunk, Lombard told her, "[i]t's hard," "[he's] going to have to have some relief," and "he done whatever these men do and relieved hisself [sic]." Blake Dep. 49, CRST App. 0446. Blake said that Lombard "relieved himself" by "jacking hisself [sic] off." Id. Blake states only that Lombard told her that she could drive the truck hard, because he wanted her to tear it up so that he could get a new truck. Id. at 73, CRST App. 0451.

14. Natasha Brown: While "J" was drinking, he made conversation that "if a female gets on his truck, they're entitled to give him some sexual contacts." Brown Dep. 36, CRST App. 0506.

20. Cynthia Fisk: Fisk stated that when they stopped at a truck stop when something broke on the truck and they needed tires, that Booze "said something about ... just acting like, you know, that [they] were married." Fisk Dep. 47, CRST App. 1015. Fisk also stated that Booze said, "[he could] get rid of [his] girlfriend and [she] could be [his] girlfriend." Id. at 64, CRST App. 1020.

27. Leah Myers Graham: Graham testified that one of her lead drivers, "Creeper," "started talking about having sex with other people" and that "he would tell [her], you know, he's the best lover and he's, you know, had lots of women." Graham Dep. 80, CRST 1170. Graham informed him that "[she was] not the woman that [he was] going to have sex with." Id. at 81, CRST App. 1170.

36. Sheila Jackson: Derrick said "whatever goes on in this truck stays on this truck, nobody is going to know what goes on in this truck" and showed her pictures of older women. Jackson Dep. 89-90, EEOC P/P App. 421.

37. Tequila Jackson: EEOC references Jackson Dep. 77-78, EEOC P/P App. 432, which includes no proposition-like conduct, and Jackson Dep. 81-84, EEOC P/P App. 433, which describes the conduct of Smith's female friend towards Jackson.

38. Zainabu Jenga: Jenga testified that Grimes told her that he had a "king size bed and [she could] come spend the night [there]." Jenga Dep. 56, CRST App. 1535. Grimes told her "don't worry, [he would not] touch [her] or anything." Id.

39. Diane Johnson: Tyrell Johnson offered to get a room at a hotel for the two of them to share. Johnson Dep. 60, CRST App. 1561. She testified that she told Tyrell that she did not know whether the hotel would have separate beds, but either way, she was not going to stay in a hotel room with him. Id. at 61, CRST App. 1561.

46. Cindy Moffett: Hines asked her to lay with him and talk to him until he fell asleep. Moffett Dep. 58-59, EEOC P/P App. 290. He later said that her evaluation was not turned in yet and that he might tell Brian that she needed more city driving, which would cause her to spend more time in the truck with him. Id. at 86-87, EEOC P/P App. 295.

49. Sherry O'Donnell: O'Donnell testified that Spears "told [her] that he was looking for a girlfriend to be a co-driver," and she testified that she did not initially rule out becoming his girlfriend if they became co-drivers. O'Donnell Dep. 77, CRST App. 1993.

50. Shirley Parker: Parker stated that, during her time with Caudle, he would make comments about her looks, and comments "about [her] and him," and "[she] took it as to having sex." Parker Dep. 60, CRST App. 2055. Parker also stated that, while she was driving, Caudle went into the back, partially undressed, and came back to sit in the passenger's seat. Id. at 76, CRST App. 2059. While sitting in the passenger seat, Caudle said things of a sexual nature. Id. Parker does not remember how much of what Caudle said was sexual, and she did not describe his sexual comments. Id.

71. Kimberly Watson: Crockett said he had not had a girlfriend in a long time, asked what girls are like these days, and made comments trying to get her to break up with her fiancé and "go out with him," saying they could drive together. Watson Dep. 35-37, EEOC P/P App. 590-591. She said she was not interested. Id. at 35-36, EEOC P/P App. 590.

g. Men throwing women off the truck or being threatened with it:

9. Darleaner Deese: Deese testified that Gorham "threatened to throw her stuff out the window." Deese Dep. 43, CRST App. 0826 (emphasis added). Deese was driving at the time. Id. She stated that she would get off the truck at the next truck stop. Id. When she got to the truck stop, Gorham took one of her bags and threw it. Id.

11. Yvonne Fortner: Fortner said he could not take it anymore and she was dropped off, and he threw her bags. Fortner Dep. 52-53, EEOC P/P App. 199-200.

16. Victoria Holmes: Holmes states regarding Jeremy: "No he, didn't threaten to put me off. He relayed that this was something that could be done, it had been done .... No, I didn't take it to mean he would. I took it to mean that he could if he wanted to." Holmes Dep. 92, EEOC P/P App. 398.

17. January Jackson: Jackson stated that she had heard him mention one time how he had put somebody off the truck and she had that in the back of her mind. Jackson Dep. 87, EEOC P/P App. 419.

22. Ramona Villareal: Villareal feared he would dump her because she had seen it happen to other women while she was driving with CRST. Villareal Dep. 84, EEOC P/P App. 563.

h. Men making them uncomfortable by parking the truck or leaving them in isolated or bad places:

1. Kathy Cannoles: The material cited by EEOC does not support the statement that she was made uncomfortable by Walker parking the truck or leaving her in isolated or bad places. On the contrary, Cannoles states that the only time they stopped was to get fuel or drop a load. Cannoles Dep. 26, CRST App. 0529.

3. Dorothy Dockery: The material cited by EEOC does not support the statement that she was made uncomfortable by Byerley parking the truck or leaving her in isolated or bad places. Dockery Dep. 54-57, CRST App. 0904.

5. Zelestine Grant: The material cited by EEOC does not support the statement that she was made uncomfortable by Ford parking the truck or leaving her in isolated or bad places. Grant Dep. 57-58, 66-67, CRST App. 1272-1273, 1275.

4. Robryna Fitch: Fitch stated that she and Enrique got into a fight their first night because the bathroom in their motel room flooded, and Enrique opened the door to the motel (to let the smell out) and would not let her close the door that night. Fitch Dep. 57-58, CRST App. 1032-1033.

6. Debra Hindes: The material cited by EEOC does not support the statement that she was made uncomfortable by Timmerman parking the truck or leaving her in isolated or bad places. Hindes Dep. 34-35, CRST App. 1349.

9. Lucinda McBlair: The cited pages do not support the statement that Martinez made her uncomfortable by parking the truck or leaving her in an isolated or bad place. McBlair Dep. 66-67, 69, CRST App. 1739.

CRST admits the remainder of paragraph 280.

Appendix Q

[34]whatever its reasons were, was segregating training. They would not let women be trained by men. That is violation of Title VII.

Q. Period?

A. Period.

Q. All right. Even if — even if the reason is to eliminate or prevent incidents of sexual harassment?

A. How about if I said to you or you said to me, we have to have — Swift was entitled to have — not have black drivers trained by whites or vice versa even if the reason was to prevent racial harassment? Would I think that was appropriate? No, of course not.

Q. I'm not asking what you think, Mr. Hendrickson. I'm asking —

A. The EEOC, what I'm telling you, our practice would not be to give anybody a pass on any kind of discrimination because they said we have to do this because if we don't —

Q. I'm —

A. — then some — white drivers will be calling black drivers "niggers." You know, male drivers will be calling female drivers "whores." [35]The only way we can deal with that is segregation. That is exactly the opposite of the entire trend of what we did in 1964, the era of civil rights. I'm amazed that you can pose that question.

Appendix Q

Q. So EEOC would bring suit for punitive damages against any trucking company which had a same sex training policy in order to prevent the incidents of sexual harassment? Is that basically right, Mr. Hendrickson?

I think I hear you and I think I understand you.

A. The —

Q. That's all I want our jury to understand, is that.

A. It's —

Q. Exactly that.

A. First of all — first of all, in order to bring suit, we would have to have a charge of discrimination from one of the victims or a commissioner's charge. Then we would have to conduct an investigation to determine was there reasonable cause to believe, in fact, the training was segregated on the basis of sex, race, religion, national origin, disability status, whatever it [36]might be.

If there was an administrative determination to that effect and the company — we were unable to bring the company and the charging parties together into a voluntary conciliation, then we look at the case and said, is this a case which should be litigated?

And in making that assessment, then we'd say, do we have enough attorneys? Do we have enough — do we have enough money for depositions? Do we — is the case in a jurisdiction where we think we can do some good? A whole plethora of reasons which we would consider whether to bring suit.

But if you're asking does EEOC sue every single trucking company in the country that has done sex segregated training, I would guess that the answer is no, we would not attempt to do that any more than we would attempt to sue every single employer who engages in any other practice.

Q. Sir, isn't it true that at the time that the EEOC brought its suit against Swift back in the '90s, that Swift defended itself by saying, essentially, that the reason it had same sex [37]training policies is to prevent incidents of sexual harassment; isn't that true?

A. That is one of the — that is one of the things that I gleaned from the pleadings which I reviewed.

Q. And the EEOC categorically rejected that, correct?

A. What do you mean categorically rejected that? Just so —

Q. You sued them anyway and sought punitive damages, correct?

A. We certain — we would never withhold a lawsuit because the employer said, we're doing this segregation but really, you know, EEOC, you should understand the segregation is good for the victims. I mean, if we did that, you know, every person in the country would be on our case.

You can't make a decision that you're not going to file a lawsuit against somebody who's blatantly discriminating because they say, oh, it's good for the victims that we discriminate. That's nonsense.

Q. So the EEOC also brought suit against Gordon Trucking Company, didn't it?

[38]A. Yeah. It looks like it was the same kind of lawsuit.

Q. Another long-haul trucking company?

A. Yes.

Q. Swift is a long-haul trucking company that had men and women driving together?

A. It appears to be that from the documents that I reviewed.

Q. And Gordon is a long-haul trucking company —

A. Yes.

Q. — that had men and women —

A. Yes.

Appendix Q

Q. And both Swift and Gordon defended themselves in those lawsuits by saying, essentially, that the reason, the bona fide reason they gave for having same sex training policies was to eliminate or prevent incidents of sexual harassment, correct?

A. Well, I was not in this — these cases were litigated by the Seattle district office of the EEOC, which has never been part of my jurisdiction, and I was not involved in the discovery in those cases.

So I cannot say all of the — I'm sure — [39]I doubt that that's — I feel certain as a litigator that they had a lot of different things at their defense that they said.

I gather from the documents that I've reviewed that the reason — that in terms of this kind of rule, things that they probably threw into the mix of their defense were the — as you say, the issue of sexual harassment.

It appears — I gather from the documents, also the issue of religion. And also I gather the issue of marital fidelity were probably all concerns that I — as I look at these documents and try to interpret what was 10 — 10 or 15 years ago that were these companies raising as their defense.

I'm guessing all of those figured. And I would bet if we went back and looked — and got the depositions of their personnel administrators, probably all of these things would appear as being offered as defenses for this — for this rule.

Appendix Q

Q. Including the intention — or at least the intention that they — that these companies articulated of attempting to prevent incidents of sexual harassment, correct?

[40]A. I'm not sure — I wouldn't go so far as to say that I read from any of these documents that they ever had the intention to eliminate sexual harassment. They — I think they had — they — they — as so many companies do, they had a policy which stated, oh, we're against sexual harassment, but every — I can't recall in my years of experience where — where we — where in really sexual harassment cases where there's been really vicious sexual harassment where the company hasn't said, we have a policy against sexual harassment. They say that all the time.

Roadway says it in this case. We have a policy against sexual harassment. But to this day, Roadway's chief executive says, sure, I get complaints all the time. I get complaints. I get three complaints a month about sexual harassment. We've got a policy.

So, sure, they offered a policy, but —

Q. Who is —

A. — what's it mean?

Q. Who is Roadway?

MS. KAMP: If I could, for the record —

MR. MATHIAS: No, I have a question.

[41]MS. KAMP: — I think you said Roadway. I believe you meant CRST.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. I meant my — I meant CRST.

BY MR. MATHIAS:

Q. Who's Roadway?

A. Roadway is another trucking company. We have a — we have another case against them in federal district court.

Q. You sued them, too?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. For sexual harassment?

A. No.

Q. What did you sue them for?

A. Race harassment.

Q. Now —

A. But I was referring to what I — the reports I received in the deposition of CRST's chief executive saying that he's continued to get, all the time, complaints of sexual harassment, but that they have a policy against sexual harassment.

So Swift — I don't credit what — I don't credit Swift ever having the view that this was an effective means or would be an effective [42]means to deal with the problem of sexual harassment. I view this as an effort to make — create a defense for probably what they saw as inevitable challenges to their practice.

Q. Okay. Sir, if you know — is it correct to say that this is the reason they gave, but that EEOC didn't accept it, didn't believe it?

A. When you talk about reasons they gave, you're talking — you're asking me to testify about a lawsuit, and in a lawsuit, they — the company speaks through — any company that we — speaks through its lawyers and through the production of documents and the — and the offering of — of witnesses, usually pursuant to notice or subpoena, and those people and those documents all say certain things.

But nobody calls up some Grand EEOC PooBah in the sky and says, this is the reason we did this. I mean, you as an attorney would know that if your client ever called up the grand EEOC inquisitor and said, the reason we did this was X, you'd probably fire the client.

What I will say is they produced a document that states that in order to deal — that [43]they're — not only do they say they're dealing — do they suggest they're dealing with sexual harassment, they suggest that the law requires them to segregate training by sex.

I mean, this — this document is, I think — it was — obviously it was not drafted with the help of Jenner & Block but the document is grossly misleading and wrong. It's wrong in — it's wrong on the law. It's wrong as a matter of public policy, and I think — I think really it's fundamentally a lie.

And it's — and it's the classic type of things we see in sexual harassment cases where management papers — papers the workplace with meaningless policies and never does beans to actually crack down on the issue of sexual harassment. And this is probably one of these documents.

Q. Maybe you're confusing things here, sir, but the Swift document that is attached to the consent decree in that case, the one that I identified as Exhibit A — or Attachment A, rather, the one we've just been talking about here was an internal document at Swift, right?

[44]A. Yes.

Q. And the document says that it — the reason it gives on its face for this procedure of same sex training is, in order to comply with the sexual harassment act guidelines.

That's what it says, right?

A. Those are the words that are on the paper.

Q. So EEOC doesn't believe that and didn't believe that, correct? You thought it was a pretext of some kind, correct?

A. I think that the people who were litigating this case did not see this as a defense to this case.

Q. And so the EEOC sought punitive damages from Swift, correct, in this case?

A. The EEOC did seek punitive damages in this case from Swift.

Q. The idea of seeking punitive damages is to punish the offending company, in part, and also, to deter others from similar conduct, correct?

A. And to deter the defending company from that kind of conduct in the future, yes sir.

Q. The defending company and other trucking [45]companies, for example, like CRST?

A. Other trucking companies and other employers generally.

Q. So CRST, for example, another trucking company, would be among the other trucking companies that should get the message loud and clear that EEOC will sue any other trucking company who does a similar thing, tries to — gives a reason of trying to prevent sexual harassment as a reason for instituting a same sex training program, correct?

A. No.

Q. Explain.

A. I think the message, if anything, that CRST should have gotten — I — first of all, I'm not even — I don't even know whether CRST was aware at the time that our lawsuit was initiated or during the period of time leading up to it that Swift had been sued. You know, maybe they were, maybe they weren't.

But let's assume a hypothetical state is they had perfect knowledge of the EEOC's actions of Swift. What were the lessons they should have got from that? Do not segregate training by sex. Don't do it, period. You cannot justify segregating

APPENDIX R — EXCERPTS OF DEPOSITION OF TEQUILA JACKSON, TAKEN JANUARY 14, 2009

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT
OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

vs.

CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC.,

Defendants.

The videotaped deposition of TEQUILA JACKSON, called for examination, taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States District Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions, taken before KRISTIN C. BRAJKOVICH, a Certified Shorthand Reporter, CSR, No. 84-3810, of said state, at Suite 4000, 330 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, on the 14th day of January, A.D. 2009, at 2:25 p.m.

[16]Q. When you say they tried to get rid of you, what happened?

Appendix R

A. When I talked to CRST — the whole time I was with CRST, I had problems as far as harassment. I tried to talk to my dispatcher at the time, which was Brian Bush, about these things [17]that I was going through with CRST. He kind of put it to the side.

The last straw was when I had the incident with Leon Smith, and I called CRST and told them that I was going through this on a Friday. They made me sit in a truck with him over the weekend before they did anything Monday. I went home. They finally brought me to Chicago and then they put me on the bus home, and that is when I told CRST that 1 didn't want to come back. But they was trying to fire me anyway so —

Q. What do you mean they were trying to fire you?

A. They — well, they was saying that because I had incidents and the people that I was with was trainers, they all failed me. They was thinking about letting me go.

I was leaving because I had so many problems with CRST, and they never ever fixed any of the problems. They just put me with another problem. They never tried to fixing anything, so I decided to leave.

Q. So you left there voluntarily?

A. Yes.

Appendix R

[73]Q. Okay. Who was your next trainer?

A. The last trainer was Leon.

Q. What was Leon's last name?

A. Smith, I believe.

Q. Smith?

A. Yeah.

Q. How long did you drive with Mr. Smith?

A. I had to stay on the truck with him until I left CRST, and I don't know — I can't even tell you exactly what time period that was. I got the call from CRST for them to take me all of the way back up to Carlisle, Pennsylvania, so I could get another trainer because he was out of— I was out of the way because I was in Atlanta.

Q. Back up now. Start over.

A. Because I was in Atlanta—

Q. This is after you got changed from the Hispanic, right?

A. Right. They put me on a bus back to Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

[74]Q. All right. To meet Mr. Smith?

A. Right.

Q. Okay. I'm with you.

A. When I got on the — he was — he started off for those couple of hours, he was an okay guy. He took me — he said, I take all of my trainees out to Applebee's. He took me around the corner. He was like, Order anything that you want off the menu. He was like, I'll pay for it. He said, I do all of my trainees like this because, you know, I want you — all of them to succeed. He was like, I know you have a couple of incidents, he was like, but when I finish — when you finish driving with me, you'll be able to do everything that they wanted you to do.

Q. At the time that you were assigned to drive with Mr. Smith, how would you describe your skills as a truck driver?

A. I was good at switching gears. I was good at driving but — I think I was an okay driver. I'm ain't going to say that I was the best. I think I did need a little work, but other than that, you know, I was not even a driver for six months, so, you know, everybody starts off not [75]being the best.

Q. Okay. So your relationship with Mr. Smith started off good?

A. Right.

Q. And then what happened?

Appendix R

A. He had conversations about me. I remember sitting driving — because he wanted me to do this 11-hour thing. This five on and five off, he did not want me to do it. He said, We are going to do this 11-hour thing. You are going to drive the 11 hours straight. I was like, Oh, I can handle that. I have done it before. That is not something new.

He was on the phone with one of his friends, don't know her name, don't care to know her name. She — they was talking about how he was attracted to, you know, small, petite girls. He said that I look exotic, like I look like I'm from the Caribbeans or Africa. He constantly talked to her about me all of the time, and I guess she gave him the fuel on the other end because he started trying to talk to me how he thought that I was good looking, how he thought, you know, it's just me and him in the truck. He won't tell nobody if we have [76]sex.

He even propositioned me to take me to Jamaica with him. He was like, I'm going to Jamaica at the end of the year. He was like, I'm going on a cruise. He was like, You can come if — you know, I'll pay for your ticket. You can come with me if you want to. And I was like, I don't even know you to be even going anywhere with you.

I called CRST, asked for a change in the driver. They told me if I changed again, I was going to get fired, so I better stick this one out.

Q. Did you tell them about what he had been saying to you?

A. No. I just said I was uncomfortable.

Q. Okay. Who did you talk to?

A. Brian Bush.

Q. And did he ask you why you were uncomfortable?

A. No. He didn't seem to care.

Q. Okay.

A. He just was like, Well, Tequila, you have been through this many people. You're always saying that it's them that's doing — saying stuff and doing something, but to me it's everybody [77]complaining against you, so you are going to either deal with it or you are going to either quit or get fired, one of those two. You got to go through this training.

They also told me that if I leave before my six months, that I would have to pay every cent, dime, and nickel that I owe them. I stayed on the truck with him.

[84]Q. All right. Did you report that to anyone at CRST?

A. No, but I did that Friday tell them that —

Q. That Friday being when? How do you remember it was a Friday?

A. Because I had to wait over the weekend before they even got me off the truck.

Q. Do you remember what month that was?

A. August.

Q. And would it have been the end of August?

A. Yeah.

Q. So on Friday, who did you call?

[85]A. I called — it was late dispatch because my dispatcher was gone by that time.

Q. Is this the same day that you encountered the friend at the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. So after that incident, is that when you then decided to call dispatch?

A. I called dispatch because he got really outrageous.

Q. Tell me what happened.

A. Friday — first of all, when he walked around the truck, he — I wore clothes. I wore clothes up to my neck so he could not — I didn't want to lead him on or make him feel like I wanted to do this. So I made sure I had kept on most of my — what we call down South, the street clothes, like this. Not night clothes. I did not even wear night clothes because I was scared that he was going to do something. He would tell me that he was go to rape me, he was going to rape me, he was going to take it. That's what he said.

Q. When did he tell you that?

A. He told me that on Friday. He was telling me that during the trip.

[86]Q. Okay. Let's back up. I am trying to get a sense — because you don't know how long you were with him, right?

A. Right. I'm not — I'm not sure how long —

Q. Was it more than a week?

A. Yeah.

Q. So this would have been a second Friday or a third Friday?

A. I can't give you a time, date, or—I just know it was a Friday.

Q. All right. So you've talked about how he told you that you were exotic and beautiful. You told me about how he offered to take you to Jamaica.

A. Right.

Q. You told me about the exchange that you had with the woman who came to visit him?

A. Right.

Q. And then is the next thing that happens is when he tells you that he is going to rape you?

A. He asked me could he have sex with me, and I told him no.

Q. And this was on that Friday?

[87]A. On that Friday. It was like it blew up after he — after her. He asked me can he have sex with me, and I told him no. He told me that he was going to take it and laughed, and he also told me he was going to rape me. He just said, Don't lay down because I'm going to rape you.

At that point in time, I had my cell phone out. I had my sister — my older sister on the phone and I'm telling her — I was like, If something happens to me — if something happens to me, this is what he looks like. This is his truck number. You know, this is his name. If anything happens to me during this time while I'm on this trip, call 911.

Q. Where are you at the time he says this?

A. That time I was out of Atlanta, so there was no way I could get home.

Q. I'm sorry. Was the truck moving?

A. The truck was moving. I was driving.

Q. Okay.

A. He told me after that, he was like, Look, I'm just kidding because he found out I was on the phone with my sister, and I was telling her — he was like, I'm just kidding. He was like, [88]You take everything so personally and you need to loosen up. So we ended up switching drivers. He ended up driving from Valdo — because I made it to Valdosta by that time. He was saying this around then.

Q. Is there some reason you didn't pull off into the next stop?

A. Valdosta was the next stop.

Q. There was no truck stops or rest areas, or anything, gas stations?

A. I stopped in Valdosta.

Q. Okay. How far did you have to drive after he threatened to rape you before you got to that very next stop?

A. I was right around the corner from the truck stop, so it was maybe 20, 30 minutes. I even —

Q. Okay. So from the time he said something, it was 20 to 30 minutes to the next stop?

A. Right.

Q. And then you stopped?

A. Right.

Q. And then what?

[89]A. I even told my family to try to come get me because — because I was afraid. That's when he told me that he was just kidding, that he was going to — he don't know why I'm taking everything personally. Then he said after —

Q. Did you call your dispatcher to report that?

A. I reported that Friday. I told them Friday evening.

Q. Okay. Where were you when you called the dispatch? Were you still at that stop?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. How did you report it by —

A. I told whatever late night dispatcher, whoever answered.

Q. Qualcomm, cell phone, pay phone?

A. Cell phone.

Q. You used your cell phone?

A. Right.

Q. And you made the call at approximately what time?

A. It was night. I can't tell you exactly a time.

Q. But it was a night dispatcher?

[90]A. Right.

Q. Do you remember who it was?

A. No.

Q. And what did you tell them?

A. I told them, I said, I'm having a situation where this guy is threatening to bring bodily harm to me and the —

Q. Did you tell them that he was threatening rape?

A. Yeah. I told him that he was bringing bodily harm. They should have automatically took him — told him to take me off the truck. The next thing he tells me is, We are night dispatch, we can't do anything. Anything can't be filed until Monday morning, so you have to sit on the truck with him.

[105]Q. This is still Friday?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay.

A. You going to be driving to the place in the morning, so be ready to drive. So he got undressed, and when he got undressed, he had on this green fishnet shirt.

Q. Fishnet what?

A. Shirt. It was a shirt.

Q. Shirt. Okay. I got you.

A. Showing all of his body from the top up and then he had on some tight shorts or something that — I guess you'd say underwear. It's like — they weren't even briefs. They were underwear, some kind of tighty whities or something.

He started saying the same thing. He started touching himself.

Q. Saying the same thing, what?

A. Like he wanted me. He was going to take it. I should just be a woman about mines and just have sex with him. Even though I told him no so many times, he was like, You don't know what a real [106]man is. That's why you are saying no to me. You need to try it, and by this time I had called my family and I was calling. I told my sister to call —

Q. You are at a truck stop while this is going on?

A. Yeah.

Q. Is there some reason you didn't go into the truck stop?

A. I did go in the truck stop.

Q. Pardon?

A. I did go into the truck stop.

Q. I mean, why didn't you leave immediately when he starts in on that whole line and he's standing there in fishnet and underwear?

A. Because the truck is yea big.

Q. Yeah.

A. If I'm up at the top bunk and he's at the bottom bunk, he can block me from getting out of the truck.

Q. Well, where — who was driving into the truck stop?

A. He did.

Q. All right. And where were you when you [107]pulled into the truck stop?

Appendix R

A. I was in the bunk. I had to get away from him. What I did was, they had — CRST either had the button up kind or the zip up kind of curtains that you —

Q. Was he driving in fishnet and underwear?

A. Was he driving in his —

Q. Yeah.

A. No.

Q. So he's fully clothed. He's driving don't the road. He pulls into the truck stop.

A. Right.

Q. All right. He comes to the back of the cab?

A. No. He took off his —

Q. He stayed up in front?

A. Right.

Q. And the curtain is closed?

A. The curtains was closed.

Q. So he undresses up in front?

A. Right.

Q. In front of the windows and everything?

A. Right.

Q. All right. And then —

[108]A. Because he parked in a back area so you can't see into the truck.

Q. Okay. So then he opens the curtains and he comes back and he has the fishnet and the underwear on?

A. Right.

Q. All right. And then what do you do? And he starts saying what you have already told me?

A. Yeah. He starts talking.

Q. And what do you do?

A. I told him that I didn't feel comfortable and I'm about to call the police. I got my sister to call the police.

Q. What did he say when you said that?

A. They ain't going to be able to find you.

Q. Okay.

A. You don't even know where you at.

Q. All right.

A. All you know is you in Florida. You don't even know what highway you on. I said, Well, I can look at the map. Well, we are going to take the map away so you don't know anything, and you going to eventually give it up. Either it's going to be you or me. And I'm sitting here like, I [109]can't believe this. My sister was on the phone, and I told my sister —

Q. Could she hear what was being said?

A. Oh, yes, she could hear. She said she's going to dial 911 and —

Q. Did she?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the police come?

A. No. What she did was because she was in Augusta, they kept asking her, Okay, look, we are going to give you a number to Florida. You call Florida. She called Florida. They ask her, Okay, where is the person at in Florida? She's like, Can you tell me — my nickname is Boo, so everybody calls me Boo. She was like, Well, can you tell me where you at?

Q. What —

A. B-o-o. Boo.

Q. Oh, Boo. Okay.

A. Yeah — So she asking me, Can you tell me where you at? And I'm like, All I know is I got off the interstate, and I turned down this street. And they are like, What is around there? And I'm telling them that it's a bunch of truck stops, the [110]TA, the Pilot, train tracks right across the street. Could you give me the name of the street? No, we are so far off the street.

Q. All right.

A. They said they will send somebody out to look for me, but they never got around to it. I guess they couldn't find me.

Q. And which police department did she call, do you know?

A. I was thinking it would be somebody in Florida.

Q. You don't know if it was a sheriff or a police department?

A. I think it was — most likely it was the police department, but I don't — I remember talking, you know, us being on three-way but I don't know exactly.

Q. You were on the three-way with the police?

A. Yeah. And I was just — I'm telling them and she's telling them the same thing that I'm saying and they just —

Q. And Mr. Smith is standing right there hearing this?

[111]A. Standing right there, don't care.

Q. All right. And then what happens?

A. He ended up standing right there because I told him that I wanted to leave at first. And he said, You're not going anywhere. He just left me — he sat there for a minute. I had to wait until he went to sleep before I even got out the truck. I waited until he went to sleep.

Q. So then eventually he just gets in the bottom bunk?

A. And goes to sleep.

Q. And you're —

A. He didn't go straight to sleep. He talked on the phone, and I'm scared and everything, and I'm just sitting here talking to my sister asking her — she asked me was there any weapons or anything around because if you're going to stay in this truck, you got to sleep with something.

Q. And then what happens?

A. I get out of the truck, and I go into the TA and I —

Q. Did you get back on the truck with Mr. Smith after that?

A. I got in the next morning, when he was [112]up.

Q. Did you call the police when you went into the truck stop?

A. No.

Q. Did you ask where you were at that point in time?

A. I didn't — to tell you the truth, I didn't — I was so terrified, I didn't ask anybody anything. The reason for that is because I have been through this same situation before.

Q. Back when you were 15?

A. Right. So —

Q. But you had already called the police once to ask for their help. Why wouldn't you have called them again now that you knew where they were — where you were?

A. I didn't know where — I still didn't know where I was.

Q. Well, there were people in the truck stop you could have asked?

A. Right. I didn't talk to nobody. They all guys. They all was guys in the truck stop. I didn't talk to none of them. All I did was waited until the morning. I ate and I sat down, and I [113]waited until the morning and —

Q. You stayed in the truck stop all night?

A. Yeah, he stayed in the truck stop all night.

Q. No, did you?

A. Yeah.

Q. Inside the truck stop?

A. Inside TA truck stop.

Q. And there was no women that ever came in the entire time that you were in there that you could have asked for help?

A. No. I just sat and ate. I sat in the little restaurant in TA and ate.

[117]Q. So after — after these several threats of rape, you voluntarily get back on the truck with Mr. Smith, right?

A. CRST told me to get back on the truck.

Q. You voluntarily got back on?

MS. VASICHEK: Objection, asked and answered.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. I don't feel like — I feel like I didn't have no choice. I didn't have nobody to come pick me up. CRST —

BY MS. HEFFERN:

Q. Well, you had a lot of choices, right?

MS. VASICHEK: Counsel, would you let her finish her responses —

MS. HEFFERN: Sure.

MS. VASICHEK: — before you cut her off.

MS. HEFFERN: Sure.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. I felt like I didn't have anything. I said, the closer I get to Jacksonville, the sooner [118]I can leave. He knows that I already called the police. He will not try to do anything else, and after that night, he didn't try anything else.

Monday morning comes. We deliver the load. We got to the deliver place. I jumped out of the truck because I seen some people, and I called CRST. And I told them the whole thing that happened. I waited until my — Brian got back, and I told him everything that happened that night. And he asked — he asked me why didn't you tell dispatch what was going on? I said, I did tell dispatch that he was threatening me and everything. They said, We are going to get you off the truck.

During that same time period, he was calling CRST saying things that I have done, so CRST took me off the truck. I asked them, I said, Could you give me a female to come pick me up? They did not give me a female. What they did was give me two males.

They picked me up. I told them that I didn't feel right being on this truck with them, and they was like, This is the only way you can get back to Chicago, you don't have no other way.

So they — so the guys didn't do [119]anything. What they did was, they let me have the bunk the whole time and they sat in the — the guy slept in the front seat and took me all of the way back to Chicago.

BY MS. HEFFERN:

Q. So it was a three-person team that took you back to Chicago, including yourself?

A. Yeah.

Q. Any problems on the trip back to Chicago?

A. No. They — I just told them — they asked me why I got off the truck, and I told them what happened. And they was like, That is ridiculous, he shouldn't have did that, CRST should fire him. And, you know, they was telling me that they felt — they could understand if I'm afraid because they could tell that I was afraid, but they promised they would get me back safely so I could get back to Chicago.

Q. So the first time you told Brian the whole story would have been that Monday morning when you get off the truck?

A. Right.

Q. And did he report what happened to HR?

[120]MS. VASICHEK: Objection, foundation.

BY MS. HEFFERN:

Q. Do you not know?

A. I talked to somebody else, too, but I can't tell you their name.

Q. Okay. So do you know whether or not it was reported to HR?

A. Yeah, because I got on the phone with somebody else.

Q. All right. A man or a woman?

A. A woman.

Q. And do you know what happened as a result of your complaint?

Appendix R

A. I feel like they did nothing because when I talked to CRST when I got home, after they sent me back to Atlanta, Georgia, I talked to CRST about it. And they was like, Well — well, we feel like the only reason that you said anything about it is because he told you you was a bad driver. And, you know, your third time, this is it. We want to deliberate. I guess that's what they call it. We are going to have to come to a conclusion to see — we are going to have let you go.

I told them — which I did say — I was [121] 21. I got really upset with them, and I told them, I'm going to get me a lawyer and I'm going to sue you for sexual harassment. And they laughed — the lady laughed in my face. She laughed in my face. She's like, Do what you want to do because you're gonna lose. That's exactly what she told me, and I hung up the phone.

The deposition of JAMES T. BARNES, called for examination, taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States District Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions, taken before KRISTIN C. BRAJKOVICH, a Certified Shorthand Reporter, CSR No. 84-3810, of said state, at Suite 2000, 500 West Madison Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, on the 6th day of January, A.D. 2009, at 9:40 a.m.

[43]Q. Mr. Barnes, you have just been handed what has been marked Barnes Exhibit 1. Do you see on the side it's numbered with CRST 194833 through 194835. Have you seen Exhibit 1 before?

A. I have.

Q. And could you tell me what it is?

A. It's a document that we use as a tool to track complaints that come in. I had this put in place January of '06. It helps me to look at things — complaints that come in and to be able to track and see if there is any issues that might recur, and if there are issues that are similar, how we might be able to minimize and diminish those by seeing any trends.

Q. And who created the actual — who created Exhibit 1?

A. Lisa Oetken.

Q. What was the purpose for creating the Positive Work Environment Communication?

[44]A. It enables me to use it as a tool to look at complaints that we receive and, again, by looking at it, see if there is any trends. And if there are trends, that we might be able to identify those, and, hopefully, if there is something, that we could address those trends to reduce the number of complaints that are coming in.

Q. And in looking at the — how often have you reviewed the Positive Work Environment Communication since it was created in January of 2006?

A. Well, Lisa and I have talked about this. I have asked her actually to look at it and so at least annually.

Q. You look at it at least annually?

A. In terms of to dissect it, correct.

Q. Can you be any more specific as to how — how often more than annually you might look at it?

A. To determine if I'm seeing any trends or anything like that?

Q. In looking at the Positive Work Environment Communication, have you ever identified any trends?

[45]A. No.

Q. What kind of trends were you looking for?

A. Just are there similar things that are continuing to happen, specifics. You know, similar situations, see if that is the case. If that is, we will address it. A lot of these cases — in fact, most of them, almost all of these cases are individual, and we take them as individual and look at them.

But, again, by looking at that, if they are similar within that, and that is what we try to find.

Q. When you say you are looking for similar things continuing to happen, are you talking about looking at whether one person – one alleged harasser has repeated complaints about him or her?

A. Well, that is one tool that we can look at, is if there is a complaint that comes in, we can refer to this and say, has there ever been a complaint about this individual.

Q. And, I guess, what other kinds of similar things were you looking for to see if they continued to happen?

[46]A. Well, you know, where is a complaint happening, what type of complaint it is, that kind of stuff.

Q. Can you tell me what kinds of complaints are on the Positive Work Environment Communication?

A. Some will be sexual harassment. Again, all complaints come in to Lisa and I. If they come in to a fleet manager and they are unsure, they will forward those over to Lisa and I.

Some of these issues, quite honestly, they are documented on here, but they may be an argument over, I just don't get along, how do I get off this truck. You know, they are —

Q. So it's your testimony that not all of the complains on the Positive Work Environment Communication are sexual harassment complaints?

A. They are sexual harassment complaints, but as we turn them in and as we investigate, they may not stay that way, but they have been on here.

Q. And what determines whether a complaint is put on the Positive Work Environment Communication chart?

A. When the complaint comes in and somebody thinks that they have been harassed, it will go on [47]this chart. There is also another chart that we have developed that is — this is the positive work. The employee relations one, that is where those would go.

Q. What kinds of complaints go on the employee relations chart?

A. They may be discrepancies. People might get in an argument, might be fighting. It might be I don't — they will call in, just general information that they may call in and say, I am not getting along with this individual. I'm not happy in doing this job, whatever it might be. Those might go on there, but these are sexual harassment claims.

Q. Okay. So a situation where one — a male driver is complaining about his male co-driver, that they don't agree on what kind of music should be on the truck, that would go on the employee relations chart?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Are all of the complaints on the Positive Work Environment Communication chart complaints by drivers at CRST Van Expedited?

A. Could you ask that —

[48]Q. Sure. Do you know if all of the complaints -- if these are complaints of sexual harassment by drivers at CRST Van Expedited?

A. Let me look through the list. This is drivers.

Q. Who came up with the title Positive Work Environment Communication?

A. I did.

Q. And how did you come up with that title?

A. Another word — I used it as another word for sexual harassment, is positive work environment, so we will have a positive work environment. That is what I used, to maintain that.

Q. Does Lisa Oetken — is she responsible for putting in all of the information on the chart — if a new complaint comes in, even if you are the person who investigates it, does Lisa enter the information on the chart?

A. Yes.

Q. Did Lisa review the chart for any — looking for trends?

A. Lisa and I looked at it, yes.

Q. And did Lisa identify any trends?

[49]A. No.

Q. Did you give her any kind of instruction of what kind of trends to look for?

A. Specific trends, no.

Q. I think you said that all of the complaining parties were drivers. Are most of the alleged harassers also drivers?

A. Yes.

Q. In reviewing the Positive Work Environment Communication chart, did you — have you ever counted up the number of complaints for each year on the chart?

A. No.

Q. So I take it you did not look to see if the number of complaints varied at all from year to year?

A. No.

Q. Did you look to see whether the alleged harassers tend to be lead drivers or co-drivers?

A. No. I didn't look at that.

Q. Have you ever provided the Positive Work Environment Communication chart to — let me ask it a different way.

Appendix S

Do you know if anybody else at the [50]company has looked at the Positive Work Environment Communication chart other than you and Ms. Oetken?

A. I can't recall.

Q. Do you recall ever giving it to anybody else, other than Ms. Oetken?

A. No, I can't recall.

Q. I think earlier you said that you recall lead drivers being removed from the lead driving program.

Does looking at this chart help refresh your recollection at all, as to anybody who was removed from the lead driver program because of a sexual harassment complaint?

A. It looks like there is a couple that I can see.

Q. Who was that?

A. Victoria Johnson and Willie Phillips.

Q. And what page? Is that on the first page?

A. Yeah.

MR. TRONVOLD: 6/1?

MS. HENRY: I got it.

Appendix S

BY MS. HENRY:

Q. And what about that?

[51]A. He was reinstated after waiting six months.

Q. Does that refer though — there's an NF which I understand means no females?

A. Yes. He had no females, was reinstated, correct.

Q. So Mr. Phillips had a no females restriction which was reinstated after six months?

A. Correct. Wendy West. Suspended from the lead driver program, down at the bottom is a Wendy West on page 1.

Q. And do you — are you able to identity anybody other than Ms. West who was suspended from the lead driver program because of a sexual harassment complaint?

A. No, I don't see it.

Q. Do you recall anybody at CRST being suspended for violating the company's sexual harassment policy?

A. Suspended?

Q. Yeah.

A. No. I don't recall.

Q. If the lead driver is suspended from the lead driving program or terminated from the lead [52]driving program, does that affect their pay?

A. It does.

Q. And how does it affect their pay?

A. It goes down.

Q. I understand that there is an additional — additional amount per mile that somebody earns in the lead driver program; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. Does being prohibited from driving with females affect a driver's pay at all?

A. No.

Q. Do you consider not being allowed to drive with females to be a form of discipline?

A. It is a form of discipline. For us it's effective.

Q. How is it a form of discipline?

A. By not allowing a driver to drive with a female, what it does is it changes — a complaint comes in. We investigate. And through the investigation, we determine that a driver is not allowed to drive with, say, a female.

What that does is, it gets that driver out of — obviously, the person making the complaint is out of the [53]environment, but also that driver then, you know, it changes their behavior. So by changing their behavior and changing what they are able — you know, that is what we are trying to do. We are trying to correct any behaviors that they have and not allow them to be in the environment that they were in.

[70]Q. When somebody complains about sexual harassment at CRST, what kind of documentation is created?

A. When somebody talks to us about sexual [71]harassment, what we do is — again, safety first. We get the driver off. Okay? Make sure the driver is safe, and then at that point in time, we will talk to the accuser, listen to what they have to say. We will listen and we will take our investigation notes. We will ask the person that is accusing to make a statement for us, so that is generated. And then anybody else that we also investigate, we will make our notes, ask for statements.

Q. Then what happens to the paperwork that is generated from the complaint, once the investigation is done?

A. Then we have a file, and the file then goes to Ms. Oetken. And then she takes the documentation from there and puts it on this report.

Q. How are the files kept?

A. We have a file cabinet.

Q. And what I'm wondering is, how are the files organized? If you wanted to find a complaint made by Monika Stark, how would you find that file in the file cabinet?

A. Alpha.

[72]Q. So there would be a file —

A. Last name.

Q. — for Ms. Stark?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And if you wanted to find out if there had ever been complaints of harassment against Bob Smith before, how would you do that?

A. By looking at the Positive Work Environment.

Q. Is there any way to look — are the files at all organized by harasser?

A. By harasser?

MR. MARKOWSKI: I assume you mean alleged harasser?

MS. HENRY: Yes.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. They are filed by alpha and myself included, when I write the file, I don't necessarily — generally would like to say that I would like to put the alleged harasser and the accused in that order, but it's flip flopped. So if I'm looking for somebody or a specific file, I may have to look — if it's John Andrews, I may look under J or I may look under Andrews. I might [73]have to look under both ways.

If he's alleged and the harassed was somebody else, I would have to look under the other person's name, as well.

Q. So on the file is there an indication of the alleged harasser's name or just the complainant?

A. It would be under the complainant. We have both names.

Q. And is that the company's practice for organizing the files, that there is the name of the complainant and the alleged harasser on the file?

A. That is the practice that we have set up, yes.

Q. Now, I understand the Positive Work Environment Communication list was created in January of 2006; is that right?

A. Yes.

Appendix S

Q. Prior to January of 2006, if you wanted to find out if complaints of harassment had been made against an alleged harasser before, how would you do that?

A. I would have had to look in the file or — myself or Lisa. Again, we are the only two [74]that investigate these issues. I would ask her, Do you recall, something like this, this. And at that point in time, she and I would have had remembrance of it or we look in the file.

Q. So would you have to look through all of the files?

A. All of the files? We just — we have a name that is on the Positive Work Environment. That would be one file cabinet, so all of the files wouldn't be that many.

Q. I'm talking about before the Positive Work Environment chart though, if you wanted to find the alleged harasser, you would either have to remember that there had been a complaint against the person before or look through the files that you had of complaints; is that right?

A. We would have had a file cabinet, yes.

Q. And you said on the Positive Work Environment Communication that there are not that many complaints on this exhibit?

A. Well, I didn't say that there aren't that many. Looking at this — again, you asked me earlier did I count specific. No, I have not counted specific.

Appendix S

[75]Do I know roughly what we get, probably three to five complaints a month on average. That is kind of what I have surmised.

Q. Do you know how many sexual harassment complaints the company has received this year?

A. Specifically January — well, '09?

Q. Well, in '08?

A. '08. Again, I guess — I would say, three to five a month, so anywhere from 40 to 50 complaints is what we had received.

Q. Do you know if the number of complaints that the company received of — do you know if the number of sexual harassment complaints that the company received in 2008 was higher or lower than the number of complaints it received in 2007?

A. I have not dissected over '08s yet, but I'm going to say close to similar, with more drivers.

Q. Do you know if the number of complaints in 2007 was lower than the — lower or higher than the number of complaints received in 2005? I'm talking about sexual harassment complaints.

A. I don't know specifically, no.

Q. Have you ever looked to see whether the [76]number of complaints that the company received in 2007 or 2008 is lower than what the company received in 2005? Let me ask it a different way.

Have you ever looked to see whether the number of complaints that the company receives of sexual harassment is decreasing over time?

A. That is hard to say, decreasing over time, because we are not — it's relative to the number of drivers. Since I have come, the number of drivers have gone up, and I guess what I have looked at in the past, not specific numbers but I have seen it in the past, is that for the number of drivers increasing and a rough guess — rough look at, it would be similar. I wouldn't necessarily say increase or decrease. I don't know specifically.

[120]Q. It says in the Positive Work Environment Process page, the second page of Exhibit 2, that one of the disciplinary actions that may be taken if there is a complaint of harassment or discrimination is probation. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Do you recall any driver ever receiving probation because of a sexual harassment complaint?

A. Not that I recall, no.

Appendix S

[139]Q. Mr. Barnes, do you recognize the documents in Exhibit 6?

A. I do.

Q. Is the first two pages a request for information from the EEOC regarding Karen Shank's charge of discrimination?

A. Correct.

Q. And then beginning on the page that is marked at the bottom CRST 36110, is that your response to the request for information?

A. 36 — 36110. It is.

Q. Okay. And it indicates that you mailed the response on December 7th of '05?

A. Correct.

Q. If you look at Question No. 4 of the request for information, it says, "State whether any complaints of sexual harassment, excluding the charging party's, have ever been made formally or informally. If so, provide the following information regarding the complaints."

Do you see that?

Appendix S

[140]A. No. 4? State whether any complaints. Yeah.

Q. And could you tell me what CRST's response was to Question No. 4 to the request for information?

A. Exhibit D. Okay. I have listed two names.

Q. And whose complaints are listed?

A. Lori Essig and Tamara Thiel.

Q. Was that response accurate?

A. When I had done this, the only thing could say is I misunderstood and didn't have the — made an error.

Q. So the response to the Request For Information No. 4 were two complaints that were identified. That was not accurate?

A. That would have been inaccurate on my part.

Q. Do you recall what you understood Question No. 4 to be asking?

A. I can't say for sure. I can't recall.

Q. As you are reading it here today, do you understand that the EEOC was asking for a list of any type of formal or informal sexual harassment [141]complaints made to CRST?

A. Correct.

Appendix S

Q. And if you look at the Positive Work Environment Communication, Exhibit 1, there is, is it fair to say, many more than two complaints of sexual harassment during that time?

A. Correct. It was inaccurate information.

Q. Do you have any idea how it came to be that you identified Lori Essig and Tamara Thiel's complaints of harassment in response to Question No. 4?

A. I can't recall. I have to look at the file again. Like I said, there obviously is a mistake on my part that I just misunderstood the question or something.

[120]Do you have a sense of whether most of [121] them are — most of these complaints are women telling you the truth about what happened to them on the truck?

A. Honestly, when we get a complaint of harassment, it doesn't matter if what they are saying is the truth or not. We separate them, and they are no longer subjected to the harassment. So, I mean, the — the fact if the harassment is true or not does not make a difference in our action.

Q. But do you — is it your impression from talking to most of the women involved here or the ones that you have spoken to, that they are telling you the truth? Do you have an opinion one way or another?

A. No, because I think as an investigator and as someone in human resources, we need to stay fair to both employees.

Q. Well, I understand that you are treating both sides fairly, but do you have — is it your opinion that the women are being truthful, when they are telling you what is happening on the truck, regardless of how it affects what you do to the parties?

[122] A. I can't say either way.

Q. You don't have an opinion either way?

A. No.

Q. In determining what kind of discipline you are going to give to a driver or recommend to give to a driver, does your opinion about whether or not the woman is telling the truth ever play into that?

Appendix T

A. No. Just like I said, when we hear a complaint, it doesn't matter whether we believe they are telling the truth or not, they are separated from the harassment and — from the alleged harassment and that person will no longer drive with the person that she is alleging the harassment on [38]Q. Okay. Then you then — you then drove with Irwin Harrell.

A. Yes.

Q. Or is it Harrell or Harl (phonetical.) Do you know?

A. Whatever.

Q. What did you call him?

A. Irwin. That's what he preferred.

Q. All right. And drove with Irwin for about eight days.

A. Yes.

Q. What happened when the two of you were together?

A. I told him, as I told my previous codrivers, that I was in a relationship, that [39]in regard to anything of a physical nature I would go home and be with my boyfriend, so that he would know specifically that there was no furtherance of any action toward me.

Whenever we did start driving together he seemed professional, and after a couple of days he told me that the reason why I was on his truck is because he wanted a white woman, and he referred to me as a snow bunny.

Q. Okay. What is— what was Erwin's race?

A. He was black.

Q. Okay. How about Mr. Branscombe?

A. I don't recall.

Q. How about Len Williams?

A. Len Williams was a black man. Len Williams then—I'm sorry, not Len, but Irwin told me the reason why I was on his truck, there was a black female that he had been driving with and he got her off his truck so that I could be on his truck because he wanted a white woman on his truck, and I reiterated that I was not there for that, I wanted an professional working relationship, I [40]planned to make truck driving my career.

Q. And your driving with — do you recall where you got on the truck, where you and Mr. Harrell joined forces?

A. I don't recall.

Q. Okay. Any specific memories about any of the driving trips that you had with him?

A. We had stopped, I believe in Dallas, one night, and he told me that he wanted me to be with him intimately, that he had wanted me on the truck with him, and that he could train me so that I would be an owner/operator, and I said no thank you, that that's not the way that I wanted to become an owner/operator. I said, "If this is a problem for you then I will get off your truck," and that's what I did.

Q. How did he respond when you told him that?

A. He said there were lots of other women that would love for — to be in my position. I said, "Well, then, you need to contact one of them."

Q. Did you tell him that in just the [41]tone of voice you're using now?

A. I don't recall. I was very tired at the time, but I did say that.

Q. Did he — did Mr. — did Irvin — Irwin physically touch you in any offensive way?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. How about Len Williams? Did he physically touch you in an offensive way?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Thomas Branscombe, the last truck —

A. I don't remember Mr. Branscombe.

Q. Okay. And Irwin was not a lead driver, or he was the — I guess he was the number one driver but he wasn't a trainer, correct?

A. No, he wasn't a trainer.

Q. All right. You were home for Christmas holiday, then, after driving with Irwin?

A. Uh-huh, yes.

Q. Is that a—did you get off in a—were you let off at home or at an appropriate place when you got off the truck with Irwin?

[42]A. I believe we got off in Fayetteville.

Q. Okay. Did the two of you part on satisfactory terms?

A. He wanted to know what I was going to say about him and I said, "Just what I told you."

Q. And did you — did you report unpleasant or undesirable conduct on the part of Irwin —

A. Yes, I did.

Q. —to your company?

A. I contacted Lisa Laveck. I don't remember when, but she was my point of contact.

Q. When was the first lime you contacted Lisa?

A. I believe it was when the fuel accident happened with Len Williams. It may have been with Dana Funny, but I believe it was—my dispatcher. I contacted my dispatcher about Dana.

Q. Next person you drove with was Charles Clark?

A. Yes.

[43]Q. Did you have problems with driver Clark?

A. He had a truck and the truck that he had wreaked of urine. Both of the mattresses were stained with urine. He admitted to an incontinent problem, and I said that would have to be dealt with. He wanted a relationship.

Q. With you.

A. Yes. And I said that I was in no position to be in a relationship at the time, I was trying to, you know, further my career in the company, and I told him that I just needed a team driver.

Q. And when you — and you were with him for, what, four or five days?

A. Yes. We ended up in California and I believe that's where I got off the truck in Fontana at our terminal.

Q. Did you ask to be let off the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you report —did you believe that Mr. Clark had given you unwanted attention of a sexual nature?

A. Yes.

[44]Q. Did you report his conduct to Lisa Laveck as well?

A. I believe I reported it to — I forget his name, he was over at the loss prevention at the terminal there.

Q. Okay. In Fontana?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And so you reported the conduct when you got off the truck.

A. I told him he was very aggressive and that I wanted to get off the truck because I just didn't feel safe.

Q. What about Mr. Clark's conduct was very aggressive?

A. He raised his voice. It was very loud. Told me that the only reason he was even driving with CRST anymore was because I needed a team driver and that he wanted a relationship with me, and I told him no.

Q. What words did he say that led you to believe he wanted a relationship with you?

A. He told me that.

Q. The words he used were "I want a relationship with you?"

A. I don't remember the exact words.

[81]Q. Okay. In — after you drove with Ellen Marley, it appears from the records that the next day you're on the truck with Jeff Hodsen. Do you remember driving with Jeff Hodsen?

A. Yes. I do.

[82] Q. What do you recall about the week that you drove with him?

A. His truck was very clean, he had plants in the window, on the—on the passenger side, he had two laptops and a web cam, and I was immediately suspicious of that and asked him what this was used for, because I had heard of some drivers trying to take pictures of, or unload to a web site their female partners while they slept.

And so I immediately asked him about this, and he swore to me that that was not the case. I said, "I do have some questions regarding this, and I would — in order for me to trust you I would trust you would not use this while I was asleep," and he agreed that he would not use his laptops while I slept, that it was just during the time that I was awake. However, he did use them when I was asleep.

Q. Okay. And how do you know that?

A. I woke up and he was using them and I had felt like there was a presence whenever I awoke, that someone was watching me.

And one time whenever I went to [83]change clothes he was looking in through the curtains at me. I always slept clothed.

Q. Okay.

A. I would never change into my undergarments.

Q. Okay. What — what problems arose, if any, between you and Mr. Hodsen?

A. He — he told me at one point that the reason why he kept his truck so clean and plants in the window is because women are drawn to that, they like a man that is clean.

Q. Did that offend you?

A. I asked him specifically what he meant by that and he said, "Well, I got you on my truck."

Q. Did you choose to go on his truck?

A. I interviewed him before I went to drive with him. I asked him a series of questions in regard to the people that he had driven with, and he said he had no complaints. He did tell me of a woman that would constantly tease him with her breasts.

Q. Okay. What did he tell you about that?

A. He said —excuse me. He said that [84]she had been a codriver of his and would flaunt herself in front of him and that he thought that I would do the same thing.

And I said unequivocally no. I said it's wrong for her to have done what she did, and I will in no way allow his advances.

Q. Okay. And did he make advances?

A. He did.

Q. What advances did he make?

A. He would try to rub my shoulders, try to brush against me, try to touch my hair. He would constantly poke me in the shoulder, and I said that's — that's very annoying to me, especially if I'm driving, it's distracting, and that's a safety issue.

Q. Okay. In fact he did give you a back rub once; right?

A. Yes. I had been driving, I believe either eight or ten hours, and I said, "This in no way means that, you know, this is a gesture from me to you. I have back pain from driving all day, and this will never happen again."

Q. Okay. And so that — you gave him that statement before either requesting or [85]accepting

A. Yes.

Q. —the back rub.

A. Yes.

Q. And then he rubbed your back.

A. Yes.

Q. Did it alleviate some of the pain?

A. It did.

Q. Okay.

A. Because we're not allowed to take any medication, you know, during our shift.

Q. And was that that?

A. Yes.

Q. I mean, he didn't move beyond the —

A. He asked me if he could do it again, I said no.

Q. And this was at a later time he asked you that.

A. Yes.

Q. Was that it?

Appendix U

A. At one point we were at a consignee, and we were in California, it was very early in the morning, I really had no idea where we were at first because it was very unfamiliar to me.

[86]And he had stood in front of me so I was not able to get out of the truck, and I asked him where we were, he said we were at one of our consignees. I said, "Well, I have to go to the bathroom." And finally he, you know, moved out of the way so I could go to the bathroom.

And I had to go back to the truck because there wasn't — I had no idea where I was.

And once he delivered the load there he took me to a very dry, I would say field, but it really wasn't a field, it was just a dirt lot, and I asked him where we were and he said, "You know where we were."

Well, he had told me that he had grown up in California or lived there and he knew various places to go that were secluded, and I said, "I'm not from here, I don't know where we are."

Before that had happened he had gotten into the bunk with me and started trying to grope me, and lick the back of my neck, trying to touch my hair and smell my hair.

[87]And I was on top of my sleeping bag and very quickly got into it and zipped it up, and I told him, "Please just leave me alone, and if you don't I will call the police," and I acted as though I had my cell phone in my bag, and he said, "Who are they going to believe, you or me," and I said, "I know what the truth is, and they will believe me. If you don't get up from here right now and move on the top bunk I will call the police and they will be here."

"You don't even know where you are," he said. I said, "They can trace my call." I didn't have my phone with me, but I did whatever — whatever I could at the time to try and make him leave me alone.

Q. And did that work?

A. It did. He got on the top bunk but we were still in that same place. I asked him to take me back to the terminal because there were some papers that I had to either sign or fax back to Cedar Rapids in regard to another codriver.

And so — oh, during that time he was laying in the bunk with me he was [88]becoming aroused, and I told him, "There's nothing that's going to happen, you need to leave me alone."

Q. Okay. And after that one started, that was after the time —

A. Just before I told him, "If you don't get off this bunk I'll call the police."

Q. Okay. And at that point are you already in your sleeping bag?

A. Yes, and I stayed there.

Q. Okay.

A. Until he did — I believe he did drive back to the terminal after I kept telling him I have these papers that have to be signed, and that my blood sugar was dropping and I had to eat.

He refused to get me any food, any orange juice for my blood sugar, and then when we did get back to the terminal I went in to — no, when we did get back to the terminal he stood in my way and he said, "You're not going to tell the people in there what happened, are you, because I'll lose my job," and I said, "I'm just going to tell [89]them what the truth is."

Q. Okay. And then what happened?

A. I went in and I made a complaint and they said that they would have someone go with me to get my things out of the truck, so if there is any— any kind of problem that they would be there.

Q. And in fact your things were taken off the truck; correct?

A. Yes, they helped me get them off the truck because I didn't want to step back inside.

Q. Okay. Your stuff was taken off the truck and then the company put you up in a hotel?

A. They did. And that same hotel is the one that he went to, and I told him "Whatever's on the truck leave on the truck, I don't want anything else to do with you."

He went to the hotel room and left a note with $20 in it and whatever was left on the truck and the loss prevention manager there in Fontana said that the only reason why he did that was to save his job.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

Case No. 1:07-cv-95

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT
OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

VS.

CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC.,

Defendant.

ORAL VIDEOTAPED DEPOSITION OF RHONDA WELLMAN

ANSWERS AND DEPOSITION OF RHONDA WELLMAN, produced as a witness at the instance of the Defendant, taken in the above-styled and -numbered cause on the 12th day of December, 2008, A.D., beginning at 8:28 a.m., before Kelly Hassell, a Certified Shorthand Reporter in and for the State of Texas, in the offices of United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Dallas District Office, located at 207 South Houston Street, 3rd Floor, Dallas, Texas, in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the agreement hereinafter set forth.

[23]Q. Okay. And who was the next lead driver?

A. His name was Albert Frelix.

Q. And your experience with Mr. Frelix was not so good, correct?

[24]A. He was really bad.

Q. You were on the truck with Mr. Frelix from Tuesday the 11th through Sunday the 16th?

A. That's right.

Q. Okay. What happened while you were on the truck?

A. Oh, just – we don't have enough time to tell you everything that happened on the truck. To start with, when I first got on do you want a short story or a long one?

Q. Well, let me ask you this: You — you've given your story to CRST, correct?

A. Correct, I have.

Q. Okay. And you gave the company a — well, let me hand this to you. You prepared a somewhat lengthy — let me ask you this: Did you report the conduct to CRST while you were still on the truck with Mr. Frelix?

A. No.

Q. Okay. You reported — you reported the conduct to CRST as soon as you got off the truck right?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Okay. And you got on the truck in Oklahoma City; you got off the truck in El Paso, Texas?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

(Exhibit Number 614 was marked.)

Q. (BY MR. VISSER) All right. I'll hand you what's been marked as Exhibit Number 614. Will you take a look at [25]Number 614. That – that's the trip inquiry sheets. Does that suggest that you were on the — that after Mr. — you got on the truck with Mr. Frelix in Oklahoma City, you went to Conley, Georgia, then picked up a load in Alpharetta, Georgia, came back across the country as far as El Paso on the 16th?

A. That sounds right, yes.

Q. Okay. So the things that you reported to the company would have happened while you were on that trip?

A. That's right.

Q. All right.

A. Mr. Frelix wouldn't allow me to touch the Qualcomm.

[34]Q. You weren't allowed to use your cell phone because you didn't have a charger, right?

A. No. He — my cell — my charger disappeared. It was in my purse. He — first of all, he told me I couldn't make any phone calls at all and I couldn't use the Qualcomm. I couldn't — and since he wouldn't let me [35] charge my phone, my phone went dead. And even when I wanted to make an emergency phone call, well, those cell phones kind of disable you because you don't remember people's numbers.

[37]Q. Okay. Had he already decided — had the two of you decided already to — to part ways by the time you [38]stopped in El Paso?

A. Oh, I wanted off the truck. I wanted off the truck in less than 30 minutes.

Q. Did—

A. I wrote in there, I had said, this is not going to work. I'm not going to tell you when my period starts and

I'm not sleeping on the top bunk. And I told him about the lady that I knew that I personally knew that I went to church with and she was a quadriplegic because her — the guy that she was driving with fell asleep at the wheel and she came flying out of the top bunk. And that's when he really started getting angry with me and that was within 30 minutes of getting on the truck. And I told him I wanted to get off and he refused. It's all in that letter. He refused me getting off the truck. I said, please turn around. You've got to let me off. I said, this is not going to work out. I will not sleep on the top bunk.

And he had demanded — as it is in the letter, he had demanded that I — that I told him the very second that my period starts.

Q. And the way that conversation came up was that you raised the subject about what his practice was on bathing and showering, correct?

A. Yes, because I had heard that some — it was a rumor that truckers only bathed once a week and that some [39]really do. I think some really do. But I wanted to know that I was going to get to shower every other day or something. He said every other day and I said, that's fine. And then the next thing he said was, you know, you need to know the rules of the truck, and he started giving them to me and one of them was that he told me that I tell him the very second my period starts. And I said, mister, I don't even tell anybody that. I am not telling you that. That is personal. I said, that is personal and private and it's embarrassing, you know, and he —

Q. Did you tell him that just kind of like you told me that'?

A. Oh, yes. No. I said, Mr. Frelix — because I didn't know him, I called him Mr. Frelix. He said I could call him Albert — I mean, Albert, but I didn't.

Q. Okay. And what did— what did you— what did you tell him? Did you tell him pretty much what you just told me?

A. Yes. And be said, you will tell me. You will tell me the very minute. I don't want to — I am not going to smell your blood.

Q. Is that what— is that— are those the words that he used?

A. Oh, he used much worse words.

Q. Okay. And what did he— go ahead.

[40]A. I wrote it in the —

Q. Okay. And what did you say in response to him, if anything?

A. I told him, I'm not telling you. I'm not telling you when my period starts. It's none of your business.

Q. And is that where the two of you left that subject?

A. Yeah. He said, lady, I'm not going to smell — he said, a woman on her period is the smelliest — he just went on and on about it. I can't tell you everything he said about it. But I was humiliated.

Q. Describe Mr. Frelix for me. What did he look like? How big a guy, what race, all that business?

A. Six foot, maybe 40ish black man.

Q. A big guy, average size, slight?

A. I would —I would say probably about 200 pounds.

Q. And essentially, Mr. Frelix, if I can characterize what you've written, he was — he was mean to you during those — from Tuesday to Sunday?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he touch you physically during the time that you worked together?

A. No, sir, he did not.

Q. Did he make a — any sexual propositions towards you?

[41]A. He did not. He did not.

Q. Did he — did he watch or refer to pornography or sex-based themes with regularity when you were on the —

A. He did not

Q. Okay. But he told stories that tried to convince you that he would — that his objective was to break the trainee, so to speak, in order that they follow his ways?

A. He loved to talk about that, yes, sir.

Q. Kind of a braggart?

A. Yeah, kind of like— I don't know. He wanted to be the king of everything. You know, he bragged about he made grown men cry. Every man that got in his truck cried. Every single person he's ever trained he makes cry. He breaks you down and he builds you up like the Army.

[60]Q. And you were on the truck together with Mr. Bruster-Buckley for about eight days, right?

A. have no idea how many days it was.

Q. Okay. Take a look at that Exhibit Number 614, I think.

A. And if this says it was, then probably it was.

Q. Well, does it— does it make sense that the two of you took a load from Los Angeles to St. Louis?

A. Oh, I don't —

Q. Is that the first — first trip that you took together?

A. I don't remember. I have to — I have to be honest. I don't remember —

Q. Okay.

[61]A. — where we went.

Q. For— does it make sense that you went there, you bounced around Illinois for a day or two, then went back to— out to Colorado, then went from Colorado back to Pennsylvania?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Okay. Do you remember where you and Mr. Bruster-Buckley parted ways?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Carlisle?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. And why did you and Mr. Bruster-Buckley part ways in Carlisle, Pennsylvania on January 20th?

A. Because he was a pervert.

Q. Okay. And what about Mr. — in what way was Mr. Dylon Bruster-Buckley a pervert?

A. He was the whole time. At first he was just sitting in the back looking at porno and talking about it and — and talking about it and talking about he's — oh, man, this chick really wants me. Oh, she's going to send me this or that. Oh, do you want to see this and that? I'm like — I'm like, I don't look at that. I don't look at porn. That's — that's — that's not me. It's not part of me. I don't — I don't want to see it. I don't like [62]it. I don't want to see it. I don't appreciate it. There's nothing about it that appeals to me. And I had to tell him a lot of times, just whatever — just to me, It was like — he didn't try to intimidate me. It wasn't really horrible like it was on the truck with Mr. —

Q. Frelix?

A. — Frelix, so —

Q. It's just — it was just distasteful to you?

A. Yes. I didn't — I hated it, but —

Q. Were you able to drive?

A. I was able to — yeah, I was able to drive.

Q. And you were able to — to sleep and do other aspects of your job without being molested?

A. No, he didn't touch me.

Q. Okay. And he didn't proposition you?

A. No, he didn't proposition me.

Q. Okay. And you didn't actually view any of the pornography that he had?

A. No.

Q. He invited you to watch it?

A. He kept asking me end kept trying to show it to me.

Q. Now, did he try to show it to you while you were stopped or while you were moving?

A. While we were stopped and moving? Probably when [63]we were stopped.

Q. Okay. During the time you were on the truck with Mr. Bruster-Buckley, did you do some of the mapping?

A. Yeah.

Q. And were you — did you have free access to the Qualcomm?

A. I didn't know how to use it really.

Q. All right. You weren't restricted in using your cell phone when you were with Mr. Bruster-Buckley, were you?

A. No, my cord was missing.

Q. Okay. You hadn't got that replaced during the time that you were with your sister?

A. No, because there wasn't — it — there I had a hard time finding a store that had the same cord.

Q. All right. Did you ask to have a change of lead drivers or did Mr. Bruster-Buckley ask to part ways with you?

A. I did.

Q. And how did you go about making that request?

A. I called when I got at the — when I got at the thing, I called.

Q. Which thing? At Carlisle?

A. At the Car — yeah, at the terminal. I'm sorry. Pardon me. And I told her that I just wanted to get off [64]the truck.

Q. Who did you tell that?

A. She — I think it was Lisa Suvak again.

Q. Okay. So you had already talked to HR and so then you talked to them again when you stopped in Carlisle?

A. Yeah.

Q. Had you — had you completed your load when you were at Carlisle? You didn't have an active load going at the time?

A. We may have dropped it and came empty —

Q. Okay.

A. — or we may have been full. I don't — I don't recall.

Q. But— but once you get to Carlisle, that's — that's when you give Lisa a call?

A. Yep.

Q. You didn't -did you-

A. Dylon was really upset.

Q. Who was?

A. Dylon, he was upset. Mr. — Mr. Buckley, he was upset that I got off the truck.

Q. And what — why — how do you know he was upset?

A. Because he came to me and talked to me. I got off — I had another driver help me get my things off and carry them and he was really upset.

[65]Q. And how did he — how did he express being upset?

A. He said, why are you doing this? Why are you — I said, look, I said, I can't drive with a guy who is looking at — at— I just can't go any further. I said, look, you're — you're really a super-good trainer. I mean, as far as what you're trying to teach me and what you're trying to do — do for me and how you're— how you're helping me learn how to back up and you're very adamant about — about shifting and getting me to do it, slow down, turn the corner, everything — I said, everything you're trying to teach me is really good. I said, but your personal habits are just — I said, it's just improper. This is a work— it should be a work environment. It's not a home environment and —and I said, you have no right to — to make me uncomfortable with all of these things—

Q. And how did —

A. — that you're doing.

Q. How did he respond to that?

A. He said, but Rhonda, why didn't you tell me you didn't like that? I said, you know how many times I called you a pervert and told you that I hate pornography? I mean — I mean, I said it straight out.

Q. Did it — was it helpful for the two of you to be able to have that conversation?

[66]A. It was at the very end and I have seen him one time since.

Q. Was it— was there any kind of a problem when you saw him after that?

A. Well, first he came around the comer and he goes, oh, you, like that (indicating) and he walked away and that was it, but that was — I just looked at my co-driver now, Joe, and I said, whatever. And he's like, who is that? I said, okay. Here it goes. So I told him.

Q. Have you seen Albert Frelix since — since El Paso?

A. Yeah, that was scary.

Q. When and where?

A. At the terminal.

Q. Which terminal?

A. The California terminal. As a matter of fact, I went in Mr. Holgart's office and said, Mr. Holgart, can I stay in here? This is the man — this is the man that intimidated me and scared — I'm really afraid of this man.

Q. When was it that you saw Mr. Frelix? Was this before you got on the truck with Mr. Brewster-Buckley or was this some later time when you were out in California?

A. Oh, boy. This was when I was waiting in California.

Q. To get on with Bruster-Buckley?

[67]A. Yeah. Well, the next day we were there and we were training. I believe it was the next day when we were there and he wanted to make sure that I could back; so he — we did like three hours. Mr. Bruster-Buckley made — had me drive around and back for about three hours.

Q. Before you went out?

A. Yeah.

Q. And was he indeed a super —

A. Because I told him — I'm sorry. I interrupted you again.

Q. Well, he— he was a super-good trainer aside from these — the personal habits?

A. Yes, to be truthful, he was.

Q. Okay. It's reported somewhere in here that be slept in the nude?

A. Yes, he did. He said he did.

Q. He told you that in advance that he did, correct?

A. In advance? I mean, a couple days later.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't — I don't think that's in advance.

Q. You didn't ever observe him in the nude, did you?

A. He came up front one time.

Q. Completely nude?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you?

[68]A. I was driving.

Q. Okay. But did he tell you that he slept in the nude and that you should announce yourself before you went the back if he was in —

A. Yeah, he did.

Q. Okay.

A. So I didn't go back there. Besides, I was driving.

Q. Okay.

A. I said — I told him that he shouldn't do that if the truck is stopped and we both are — and I said, but with the curtains shut, you know, people change back there. It's like you know —

Q. And that was — that was an acceptable arrangement for you?

A. Not really. I thought that was very unusual.

Q. Okay. Did you object to it?

A. Well, I can't tell him what to do when the curtain is shut and he's back there.

MR. VISSER: Okay. Let's — let's take a break right now. We're about out of tape. And we'll start again in Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're now off the record. The time is 9:59.

(Break was taken)

[69] THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're now back on the record at 10:14.

Q. (BY MR. VISSER) All right. Ms. Wellman, you were driving with Mr. Bruster-Buckley. Did he — did he request — have anything to do with request — I take it he did not want to change drivers?

A. No, he didn't.

Q. Okay. Did he do anything else that you found to be offensive or creating a hostile work environment while you were on the truck with him?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What did he do?

A. He came in the front seat the day before I decided to get off the truck. He came up in the front seat while I was driving and he was sitting there and he talked — from the time I got on the truck, he talked about having a — this was really uncomfortable because he was talking about having a really large penis and that — that's the — that's what he sends pictures of all the time and his — and girls send pictures to him and he sends pictures to them and he already had loaded a whole bunch of pictures on there because I didn't see it. You have a little camera or something. He didn't have nothing like that. But he was always talking about it and he came up in the front and he said he wanted to show it to me.

[70]A. And I told him —

Q. Wanted to show you the picture or that he wanted to show you his penis?

A. No, he wanted to show it to me.

Q. Uh-huh. What did he say exactly?

A. Oh, that was a long time ago, but he said — he said that he had shown it to one other driver. She was — he said — he described her and he said she was a black girl and she wanted to see it; so he had showed it to her and she liked it and he wanted to know if I wanted to see it too.

Q. Okay. He was dressed at the time that he was making this offer to you?

A. Sure. Yes, he was.

Q. It was in January, right?

A. Uh-huh. That was when I was driving with him.

Q. So he's in the back, comes up to the passenger seat?

A. Yeah, he's in the passenger seat.

Q. You're — you're driving?

A. Yeah.

Q. And he had asked you if you wanted to see his penis?

A. Yep.

Q. I mean, is that — was it accompanied by any [71] further discussion or that's just the question he posed?

A. That was just — he was rubbing his pants in the front and saying — and again talking about how large it was. And again, I was telling him, you're perverted. You know, why are — you're obsessed with your own body, you know? And I kept telling him, you're obsessed with your own body. Why are you— why are you like that? And so —

Q. What did he say when you asked him that?

A. He said, most women like it.

Q. But that — what would that have to do with him being obsessed with his own body?

A. Because he wanted to show it to me.

Q. Did he show it to you?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. While you were driving right there?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you report that to the company?

A. He took it out.

Q. Okay. In what — did he — what was he — what was he wearing?

A. He un — well, he was — like I said, he was touching himself.

Q. Was he wearing, what pants with a zip-fly front or was he wearing sweatpants or —

A. Just regular jeans.

[72]Q. Okay.

A. And he put one hand at the bottom and one hand over and he was trying to — he kept saying — even he turned on the light so the reflection was right there in front. I mean, the reflection of him sitting in the seat was right there in — in the view of— it was nighttime.

Q. Okay. It was nighttime; so when he turns on the cab light, there's a —

A. The reflection of what he's doing.

Q. — reflection back?

A. Yeah, there's a reflection right there (indicating) in the —right there in the windshield.

Q. Okay.

A. And he keeps on saying, I'm not going to put it back until you — until you look at it. You're not going to believe - you know, because he's still talking about how large it is.

Q. So you're driving for — you're driving, looking forward and watching the road, obviously, right?

A. (Nodded head affirmatively.)

Q. And he — and he asks you — you tell him he's perverted and ask him why he's obsessed with his own body, right?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You have to say —

[73]A. Yes. Yes. I'm sorry.

Q. And did you — did you specifically ask him not to expose himself to you?

A. Yeah, I told him, I said don't do that again. I said — I said, put it back. I said, don't do that again. I said — I said, Dylon, this is not working out. You're a really good trainer, but I said, it's not working. This is not working out. Okay. Okay. I'm sorry. I won't do that again.

Q. And — and what — what exactly is it that he did?

A. Took his penis out and held it like this with two hands (indicating).

Q. Okay. And you know this because you looked or because you saw it in the — this reflection in the mirror?

A. I saw it in the reflection in the mirror and he said he wasn't putting it back until I looked.

Q. So you looked in order to get him to —

A. So I said, okay, I looked. I said, okay, I looked. Now put it away and go away.

Q. Okay. And about how long was — was his penis exposed?

A. He pulled it out, sitting like this (indicating) with it, kind of moving it. Probably, I don't know, a couple minutes.

[74] Q. Was he — was he masturbating?

A. Well, he was before he pulled his pants down. Well, he was touching his jeans.

Q. Okay. So was his penis erect?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Okay. And I take it that he did not ejaculate?

A. No, he did not.

Q. You — he — he covers himself and then what, goes back to the back?

A. Oh, gosh.

Q. Did he stay in the —

A. He probably had — well, I was driving; so he had to get some rest.

Q. Okay. So he went back to the —

A. Right.

Q. Okay. Did you ever tell anybody at the company about that in just the way that you told it to me right now?

A. I believe I told Mr. Holgart — Mr. Holgart at the terminal.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't know if —

Q. Because you were about to come to — you were just getting off the truck. You got off the truck in Carlisle, right?

[75]A. Yeah, I did.

Q. So you wouldn't have been back to see Mr. Holgart for quite some time, right?

A. For a while, yeah.

Q. But you talked to Lisa —

A. I told her about him getting up and coming to the front of the truck naked. And when I got off the truck with him, he begged me — he begged me, he said, this — please. Please. He said — he said, was I a good trainer? And I said, as a trainer, you're a really, really good trainer. I said, you're a fabulous trainer. I said, anything I wanted to know and more than — more than what I really — you know, I said, you were very— really on the ball. I mean, he was a really on-the-ball trainer. I said, but your personal habits suck and it's really disgusting and you should — never, ever, ever have — get to drive with another woman again. I said, you're — I said, you should just drive with men. I said, because you don't know how to act. You don't know how to treat a lady like a lady.

Q. How old a guy was he?

A. He was in his 30s. He was from California and he had hair down to here (indicating) and — and he thought he was pretty hot.

Q. Okay.

[76]A. He thinks he's — he thinks he's pretty much God's gift to women, so —

Q. And how is it that you— how is it that you draw that conclusion?

A. Oh, because he talked about himself all the time.

Q. Okay.

A. I mean, he — he sent pictures and everybody — and, oh, they love my long hair. He was a blonde and — you know, I'm a California surfer and all this stuff that he used to talk about. But he was a totally different personality than Mr. Frelix, that's for sure.

Q. Okay. So when you talked to Lisa and reported that — what is it — what did — what did — you told the people at CRST that he was always watching the porn, right?

A. Yes, I did, because it was true.

Q. And you didn't — you didn't mention that he had exposed his erect penis to you, did you?

A. No. He asked me not to and I didn't do it. I didn't tell.

[77]Q. (BY MR. VISSER) The trip inquiry sheet, which I think it may be the third sheet, it shows you and Mr. Flowers — you being assigned to Mr. Flowers's truck as early as January 21st, but you don't really — it doesn't [78]look like you left Pennsylvania until January 28th?

A. Okay. That could be.

Q. So does that— so does being in the hotel or motel for about a week sound about right?

A. Yeah, sure.

Q. And together, you and Mr. Flowers went from Pennsylvania out to Utah, and then from Utah went back towards Wichita, Kansas?

A. Yeah. We went — yeah, we stopped in Colby. That's where it ended.

Q. Let me ask you this: Did you finish your training — had you finished training by the time you completed your time with Mr. Flowers?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. They had determined that it could be finished, that there was nothing —

Q. So even though it wasn't 28 driving days, it had taken more than two months —

A. Yes.

Q. — and you had had a lot of different experiences?

A. Yes.

Q. How was Mr. Flowers as a trainer?

A. He was a good trainer.

[79]Q. And if I understand it right, you met Mr. Flowers initially during your orientation in Cedar Rapids?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he's the guy that jumped this —

A. Yes.

Q. — later-apologetic white guy that cornered you?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you — had you encountered Mr. Flowers again from December through late January when he picked you up in Carlisle?

A. Nope.

Q. How is it that you happened to get in the truck with Mr. Flowers?

A. Okay. Mr. Flowers, he said, look, If your other trainer doesn't work out, if anything happens —this was before I even rode with Mr. Newport — he said, give me a call and If I don't have anybody, I'll see if I can get you on. So when— when it happened that I had got off the — that my first trainer broke his ankle and I tried to get on with Mr. Flowers, but he already had — he was already training somebody. So that's why I ended up with Frelix and then after that, Buckley. And then finally he actually became free after that and that was by total coincidence.

Q. So the — so the two of you had requested each other or you had requested him?

[80]A. I said, well, I got to have one more trainer and at least I've met this guy. You know, he seemed like he would be fine.

Q. And as a trainer, he was?

A. As a trainer, he was.

Q. Okay. Did he — during the time you were together on the truck, did he engage in inappropriate sex-based conduct?

A. Sex-based conduct?

Q. Did— did he proposition you?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. Okay. And how so?

A. He — he asked me if I wanted to be with him.

Q. Okay.

A. And I said, well, what do you mean? He said, well, like a couple. And I said, well, I'm — I don't want to. I said, I like you as a person and— but no, I don't want it. And we were— at the time, we were in — he had been really nice up to that point. He had — he bought me stuffed animals. I thought that was really strange and I kept thinking, why is he buying me stuffed animals? But then when we got into Salt Lake City, Utah and we were there, then I kind of got the gist of what he — what he wanted because then he said he wanted to be together with me, you know?

[81]Q. Were those the words he used?

A. Yeah. He's an older man and he was trying to put it in a — and I told him no, that I wasn't interested, and I felt really uncomfortable; so I just got off the truck and stayed inside the truck stop watching the— they have a big-screen TV and I sat next to a lady and I told her, I said, look, I said, I've been through so much; and I told her about my first trainer was great, second trainer, third trainer, and that this man seems so nice, but now he's starting to ask me for, you know, sexual favors and I — she goes, well, just stay up here and watch TV with me; so I did.

And the next day he was— I mean, I came back on the truck very late after I thought he was already asleep and I crawled up on — in— on the bottom bunk. He was— he was— he let me have the bottom bunk. He slept in the top. So I got in the truck and he was on the top bunk and I got on the bottom and it was — he didn't say anything else, but the next day he was very upset because I didn't come back and he said —he said, well, why don't you want to be with me? You don't like me? You don't think I'm a nice guy? You're not attracted to me? You don't like me because I'm black? I'm like, no. I said no. And I called him Mell. I called him by his first name because he— you know, he was actually nicer and I had met [82]him before.

So I said, no, Mell, I'm not. I don't want to be with you. I don't want to be with anybody. And I will be looking for a lady co-driver, although I never found one really. But he said, what are you going to be, a nun? He said, are you a nun? Are you a nun? And I said, no. Stop saying that. I'm not a nun. I just don't want to. I said, I might take that — I might get a CB handle, The Flying Nun. How about that? I said, I'll just be The Flying Nun. And then he just kind of giggled.

Appendix V

And then when we got into Colby, Kansas, that was — you know, we drove — we took the 70 and that was — it was iced over and it was during my last week and he did own his— or leased his own truck; so he was allowed to take the 70 and so we took it through Colorado and into Colby, Kansas. And from there we got iced in and the — and we — we arrived there in the morning and I just got off the truck and he made pancakes or whatever else, but I wasn't on there. He always cooked on his truck. He would make — he made breakfast, lunch and dinner on that truck. He put it — he made it in like a fry pan.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Like an electric fry pan. He was a really good cook. So he — after that, I just stayed off the truck and — and I came back on and I — I grabbed my - my [83]wallet and I left and he said, aren't you going to eat breakfast with me? I didn't want to eat breakfast with him because I didn't want any more advances. I just wanted to stay away from him, so —

Q. So you went — you went into the truck stop?

A. The truck stop. Well, I stayed there and he goes, bye. He came in and he waved bye. I went, what do you mean "bye"? And, you know, I said — this other truck — truck driver was sitting in the same terminal and he goes, bye? He said, aren't you a student? And I said, yes. I picked up my purse, I started going through the door and he was already in the — he was in the fuel line and he got on the truck. He just got in the truck. And I'm like yelling, Mell, Mell, and he just drives off and leaves me.

Q. Okay. So had the — had the ice cleared up some?

A. No, not really.

Q. So had — during the time that — about how long into the —you were together driving from January 28th through February 6th, right, nine days?

A. According —

Q. Does that sound about right?

A. About nine days with Mell?

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Gee, I didn't realize it was that long. Yeah, it [84] was just — yeah.

Q. How far into the trip did Mr. Flowers begin making the advances? Like towards Salt —

A. Just a very— the day before — in Salt Lake City.

Q. So in Salt Lake City is when — is when you thought, this is a little too weird?

A. Yeah. With Bruster-Buckley, if we would have stopped long enough, I would have — I would have stayed inside a truck stop, but his truck — his truck – his dispatcher was Laura. She kept us running.

Q. Mr. Buckley's?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. So Mr. Flowers, it looks — it looks like you arrived in Salt Lake on February 1st and then started out from Ogden, Utah on February 4th?

A. Yeah.

Q. So you were laid over, what, over the weekend there?

A. Uh-huh. Yeah, we were there for the weekend.

Q. So —

A. And I stayed inside the truck stop.

Q. So during the time that — was it during the time that you were there over the weekend that Mr. Flowers began to buy you the stuffed animals and made the more direct [85]proposition to you?

A. No, the stuffed animals were a few days before.

Q. Okay. So — so was the propositioning conduct by Mr. Flowers only in the last couple of days on the truck?

A. Just the last few days.

Q. All right.

A. It only happened that — it only happened that one night.

Q. All right. At what point —

A. But he hadn't apologized; so I felt very uncomfortable.

Q. You had already contacted the company about the intimidating conduct of Mr. Frelix. You had contacted them about the —the unusual conduct of Mr. Bruster-Buckley.

Why didn't you contact the company about what Mr. Flowers did?

A. Because I was waiting for him to correct his actions and make an apology. I'm a forgiving person if somebody — if — if he would — I was just waiting for him to say — because he said that he was a believer in God and I was really waiting for him, you know, to ask me to forgive him.

Q. So if he would have straightened up and apologized for his out-of-bounds propositions, that would have made things right, as far as you were concerned, [86]between — between you and Flowers?

A. Yeah. Yeah.

Q. And — but what he does instead is you're sitting in there having — having — having your breakfast in the truck stop, he comes in and yells good-bye across the — across the space of the truck stop restaurant?

Appendix V

A. Yeah, he's walking and going, goodbye, goodbye, goodbye, goodbye, and I'm at the far end. I'm coming. You know, I'm getting my stuff. I'm picking up my purse and my shower stuff because I went — I took — went and took a shower and came back, grabbed a little breakfast sandwich and a coffee and was just sitting there eating my breakfast sandwich and my coffee when he was waving good-bye. So I picked it up and I went out there and I watched him leave and so did the people sitting with me. And right after he left, I'm just standing— he's like, where is he going? You know, the people at the table were like, where is he going? I said, I don't know where he's going. He didn't tell me he was leaving.

And there was a policeman there. After about, oh, 15 minutes, I said. okay. I told the policeman that he had left and he has my things — and he has my personal things because there was a policeman there buying some coffee and whatever else he was buying and I was calling the company and telling them that this man has just [87]left me.

Q. Did you get ahold of somebody at the company?

A. Yes, and I talked to Jim Schommer.

Q. Okay.

A. And I said, I don't know what's up with your drivers. I just actually — I kind of feel bad because I let him have it. I said — I said — I started telling him, you — the — you know, my — I had to put up with this driver and this driver and these men don't know how to — don't know how to — have no business training women if they don't know that it's just a job, that they're just there for training, and I — I kind of — yeah, I kind of told him that –

Q. Did Mr. —

A. — I wasn't liking CRST very much at that point.

Q. Did Mr. Flowers come back?

A. They sent — they sent us messages by Qualcomm and after he came back out of Wal-Mart— which I had no idea where he was going — after he came back out of Wal-Mart, then he saw the message and he came back.

Q. Was he — was he driving bobtail or did he take the whole rig over to Wal-Mart?

A. He took the whole thing, but you can do that with Wal-Mart.

Q. And he — he came back after seeing a Qualcomm [88]from the company?

A. Yes.

Q. And what happened then? At that point, you take your belongings off of the truck?

A. I asked the policeman to observe me taking my things off the truck and he kept Mr. Flowers there inside the store with him.

[106]Q. Okay, Anybody else at the company that we haven't talked about today ever not respond to complaints that you made about sexual harassment?

A. Nobody ever really responded to any [107]complaints that I made.

Q. So even though they took the complaints, your position is that the company didn't respond to the complaints that were made?

A. No, They — if — if — like I said, if they would have just validated me –

Q. When is it that you decided to become part of this proceeding?

A. I received a letter saying that there was such —

Q. When?

A. Sometime in October, I believe, I can't give you a date.

Q. Okay, Have you personally observed any other woman being sexually harassed who is an employee of CRST?

A. No, only heard of them.

Q. Okay, The — what are you looking for as being part of this lawsuit?

A. Validation.

Q. Okay. And what would give you that validation?

A. What I was looking for in the first place.

Q. If the company heard your story, then it heard what Mr. Frelix said about what went on in the truck and they're different stories, what would you expect the company to do?

A. Well, they sent me a letter and told me what [108] they — what they were going to do.

Q. Which was?

A. Defend their truck — their trainers.

Q. CRST sent you a letter saying that they would defend their trainers?

A. Yes.

Q. And who was — who signed that letter?

A. I don't remember and I don't — and I've searched high and low for it, but I haven't found it. But they should have a copy of the letter they sent to everyone.

Q. And they sent it to everyone?

A. They — it was a general letter, it wasn't a personal letter.

Q. Okay. So you don't know whether that is pertaining to your particular situation or not?

A. No, it didn't seem — it didn't — it wasn't personal towards me. It seemed like that it was because of the lawsuit that they were sending it to everybody.

Q. Okay. And if, in fact, the company was engaging in a proper process, would you expect them to defend their practices and policies?

A. Well, sure. I guess they would have to protect their — protect themselves.

Q. Would you agree that the company can't really do anything to — more than it's doing now to prevent somebody [109]like Mr. Flowers from making a pass at a co-driver in a cab?

A. I don't —

MS. BARAN: Objection to the extent it calls for speculation about what the company is doing, but you can answer the question.

Q. (BY MR. VISSER) Can you answer the —

MS. BARAN: Ignore what I said. Just answer his question.

Q. (BY MR VISSER) Is there anything more that the company can be doing than it's already doing to prevent —

A. I don't know what they're already doing. I don't know if they're doing anything.

Q. Well, you know the company's policy, right?

A. Yeah, it's on paper.

Q. Okay. And you know that when you've complained, you've been listened to, correct?

A. Yeah, they listened to me and he also told me on the phone that he didn't believe me.

Q. Who told you that?

A. Jim Schommer, He said, I don't believe it. I don't believe any of our trainers would act in such a way. That really made me feel bad.

MR VISSER: We're going to have to take a break right now because we're out of tape.

[110]THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're now off the record. The time is 11:14.

(Break was taken.)

Appendix V

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're now back on the record at 11:21.

Q. (BY MR. VISSER) Okay. Ms. Wellman, what conversation did you have with Jim Schommer? You talked to him — you talked to him in Colby, Kansas when Mr. Flowers drove off, right?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you speak to him after Mr. Flowers drove off, but before he returned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you — was that the only time you spoke to Mr. Schommer?

A. I may have spoken to him a couple of times and I spoke to like three or four people that kept giving me to somebody else. And I — I wasn't exactly — I'm not exactly sure who all I spoke with. But the very first time I ever heard Jim Schommer's name was when I was – when they — was that time I talked to him between the times that you said, before — after he left and before —

Q. He came back?

A. — he came back, yes.

Q. So in that 40-minute — somewhere in that [111]40-minute timespan after Mr. Flowers left and before he came back is when you talked to Jim Schommer?

A. Yeah. I don't know— I'm not exactly sure about the timespan.

Q. And you talked to —

A. About 40 minutes.

Q. And you talked to three or four people at the company before you got to Mr. Schommer?

A. I — I don't remember how many people I talked to. Probably three.

Q. All right. And do you —

A. I don't remember.

Q. — do you remember what you told Mr. Schommer?

A. I told him that — that his — that his — that they need to do something about their male drivers. They need to make sure— that they need to make sure that they don't tell them that they will stick up for them and that they won't — that they will cover them, because every single one of them will tell you except for — I have to make an exception. Mr. Newport never — never told me anything bad or that was unkind. He was a really good man.

Q. And Mr. Steele didn't either, the guy you're driving with now?

A. Oh, Mr. — no, he's — he's a good partner, and that's why I've been with him for many months.

[112]Q. And the African guy that was a bad driver didn't say anything about getting away with sexual harassment, did he?

A. No, because he was a co-driver. He wasn't a — he wasn't a trainer.

Q. Okay. And when Mr. Schommer said he — did — did he say he didn't believe or couldn't believe that someone would drive off like Mr. Flowers had?

A. No, he didn't say that he couldn't drive off. He — I told him about him making a pass at me and that's why I thought he left me there. And I told him that I thought the company condones — I said, Mr. Schommer, you guys condone it because every — I said, the ones that have made passes at me have told me that the company will stick up for them and the company will not believe — they believe the trainer, not the student. And I said, and that's wrong. I said, you guys don't believe. I said, that's why it keeps on happening. I mean, I really — I really kind of told him off, I really did.

[46]Q. All right. So now, if we use those dates as our frame of reference, where do you meet – where do you meet Chuck on the first morning of the trip?

A. At the terminal in Dallas/FortWorth.

Q. And is that the first time you meet Chuck in person?

A. It is.

Q. Do you know what time you start – what time you meet him?

A. I think I got there in the morning; I don't remember, but I think it was the morning.

Q. Okay. Got along with him all right in the morning before you left the terminal?

A. It was just the preliminaries. Hi, how are you doing, putting my stuff on the truck.

Q. Did you get any references on Chuck, talk to other CRST people, people he had ever driven with prior to driving a truck with him?

A. No. As far as I know, they've never given us that type of information. They just give us the names [47]and call him.

Q. You didn't ask him for information as to other people he had driven with?

A. No.

Q. Describe how that first day went.

A. Well, after I got in the truck, we went to pick up the load, and then we went to a truck stop, and we got out and I went in to get me something to eat.

Q. So this is just as you're starting the trip?

A. Just as I'm starting the trip.

Q. Okay.

A. So I'm standing in the line ordering my food and he comes up and puts his arm around me, and he tells the people in the restaurant that I'm his wife. And I told him. No, I'm not your wife, and I have a boyfriend, get your arm off of me. So I went and sat down and he came and sat down too, and that's pretty much how it started out, yeah.

Q. So when you had this conversation with Chuck and told him, you know. Take your arm off of me, did he comply?

A. He did.

Q. Okay. How did he take your response to his touching you?

A. Just he apologized. Oh, I'm sorry, you know, that [48]was it.

Q. Okay.

A. And then I went and sat down, and he came and sat down while I was eating.

Q. Did you call or report that activity to anybody at CRST?

A. No.

Q. Okay. So then I assume after the stop, you eventually get back in the tractor and take off?

A. Yep.

Q. And then how does the rest of the day go?

A. It basically went with him telling me that we were getting married, and I was going to go to Africa to meet his family. And I kept reiterating that I had a boyfriend, and I wasn't interested. So that's pretty much where the conversation kept going, back to getting married and back to going to Africa and back to meeting the family. So eventually I just let it die and went back to the sleeping berth started, you know, putting my stuff up so I could lay down and go to sleep.

Q. When was it that you went back to the sleeping berth?

A. After I ate.

Q. Can you give me any time of day so we can kind of have a frame of reference?

[49]A. It was still daytime, the sun was still out, but I don't remember what time it was.

Q. Before lunch, after lunch?

A. I think it was probably lunchtime when I was eating; it was sometime in the afternoon.

Q. Okay. So just so I make sure I'm clear when you say you stopped right away to get food to eat, does that mean that your first stop was around lunchtime?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Then you get back in the cab, there's a conversation about you getting married and going back the Africa, he just brings this up having just met you?

A. Having just met me.

Q. And when he says, we're going to get married and go back to Africa, you've explained you're not interested and you have a boyfriend?

A. That's correct.

Q. Does he say it again?

A. He does, he does, and he doesn't let sleeping dogs lie, he keeps saying it, so, yeah.

Q. And I assume his English is good enough that he understands you or do you know?

A. I think so, yeah, yeah.

Q. All right. How many times does he mention the two of you getting married and you going to Africa?

[50]A. I didn't count it, but it was enough to get on my nerves.

Q. Any idea?

A. But I'm not sure how many times.

Q. More than twice?

A. More than twice, yeah.

Q. More than five times?

A. Probably not as many as five somewhere between three and five.

Q. Did you report that to anyone at CRST?

A. No. At that point, I didn't think anything of it.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Because I felt like he understood, he got it, and he was going to leave me alone.

Q. So you thought by the time you had your last exchange that he had gotten the message?

A. Yeah. I'm not the type that sugarcoats anything, and I can be quite rude when I want to be, so he knew where I was coming from as far as I was concerned. He understood me and he was going to back off, at least that's what I thought.

Q. What was it that he said or did that led you to believe that he understood and was going to back off?

A. Because he got quiet after I went back to the [51]sleeping berth and didn't bring it up anymore, so I thought it was over.

Q. Okay. What happened next during that day?

A. I went to sleep, and I woke up with him on top of me trying to pull my breast up out of my shirt.

Q. Where was the truck at this point in time?

A. Parked. I don't know where we were. Well, when I woke up, I believe we were on an off ramp or an onramp on the freeway.

Q. Can you narrow it down any more than that?

A. I don't remember where we were. I mean, I was asleep, woke up out of my sleep. I don't know where we were.

Q. Did you hear the truck stopping and parking?

A. No, I sleep pretty hard. I do.

Q. What did — what happened?

A. I told him about — cussed him out told him I don't know how they do it in Africa, but in the U.S., you ask before you touch anybody, and then if the woman says it's okay, then you touch them, but you don't touch them beforehand. And he got the message because he started apologizing, and he left well enough alone. I got up out of the bed, and I went — started driving the truck to New York.

[54]Q. You need to tell me more specifically about exactly what he was doing. I understand what you've already told me he was laying on top of you?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did he have his hand on your —

A. In my shirt on my breast, yeah.

Q. Were you wearing a bra?

A. Yes.

Q. Was his hand inside the bra?

A. Inside the bra —

Q. Okay.

A. — touching the nipple region, yeah.

Q. And that was the first that you were aware of him in your berth was —

A. Yeah.

Q. — when you woke up with his hand on your nipple?

A. Yes.

Q. Describe for me a little bit the berth, what size it is?

A. It's big enough to fit — it has two beds, one like bunk beds, full size, twin up at the top. You can [55]fit a small refrigerator in it. It's a nice size. You can fit quite a bit of stuff, but it's made to stack stuff, you know, back there. Judging from the cab to the sleeping berth, you probably have about the width of this table if not a little bit longer for the sleeping berth.

Q. So that table to me, maybe, looks like five and a half feet?

A. Both tables together —

Q. Right.

A. — is about the size of the sleeping berth.

Q. If I say I'm eyeballing that at five and a half feet is that within —

A. Yeah.

Q. — the range of what you're recollecting?

A. Yeah.

Q. As I understand it, there's a lower berth and upper berth?

A. That's correct.

Q. Were you sleeping on the lower berth or the upper berth?

A. I was sleeping on the lower berth.

Q. Is that your assigned berth or do you trade off?

A. No. You're not allowed to sleep in the top bunk unless there's a cargo net while the truck is rolling; [56]it's against the law.

Q. Okay.

A. So you have to sleep in the bottom if the truck is moving.

Q. Okay. And so I'm still trying to make sure I have a mental image, if he stopped the truck, he can stand up and walk back into this berth area?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it tall enough you can stand up; do you have to crouch down?

A. Oh, no, you can stand up.

Q. So he had climbed into the lower berth with you?

A. That's correct.

Q. Laid on top of you and then put his hand inside your shirt and bra, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. So you push him off; you've told me what you said to him; he apologizes.

A. Yes.

Q. Then what happens? You get up and start driving?

A. I do.

Q. Where does he go?

A. To the sleeping berth. Well, he's still in the sleeping berth, but I guess he goes to bed at that point.

[57]Q. Was it the time to change shifts?

A. It was.

Q. Okay. What did you do once you started driving?

A. That was it. I just drove to New York.

Q. You didn't call in to CRST at that time?

A. I had planned on speaking with my dispatcher in the morning when he came back.

Q. Okay. So when is the first time you contacted CRST with regard to what happened in the cab?

A. It was the following morning.

Q. Okay. About what time?

A. I don't know. I don't know. I don't know. I just know it was in the morning.

Q. Okay. And how did you make contact with CRST at that point?

A. I called them.

Q. Who did you call?

A. I called my dispatcher.

Q. And dispatcher, is that the same thing as fleet manager?

A. Yeah, I guess so, yeah.

Q. Who was your dispatcher?

A. I don't remember the name.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. I don't remember his name.

[58]Q. It was a man?

A. Yeah. I had just gotten him when I got the codriver. When you get into somebody else's truck, whoever their team manager is or their dispatcher is becomes your dispatcher, so whoever his dispatcher was my dispatcher.

Q. You had just gotten a new fleet manager as well as a new codriver?

A. Exactly.

Q. All right. Had you had any problems with the fleet manager, I know it was a short period of time, but up until October 2nd had you gotten along with your fleet manager?

A. Yeah.

Q. And your fleet manager is your direct supervisor, correct?

A. Yes.

MS. HEFFERN: Do you want to go off the record now?

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We are off the record. The time is 10:41 a.m.

(Break taken from 10:41 to 10:42 a.m.)

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We are back on the record. Our time is 10:42 a.m. This is the beginning of Tape 2.

[59]MS. ANDERSON: Excuse me Counsel, when you say fleet manager, is that the same person as the dispatcher? Because y'all were saying different people.

Q. (BY MS. HEFFERN) Well, let's clarify that. I thought I had asked earlier whether the dispatcher was the same as the fleet manager?

A. And I think it is, yeah.

Q. When you say dispatcher I say fleet manager, we're talking about the same person?

A. As long as you're talking about the person that sends me out on the load then, yes.

Q. During the time you were at CRST, how did you refer to them?

A. Dispatcher.

Q. Okay. Is that a term you're more comfortable using?

A. It is.

Q. Just for the record, as far as you understand that would be the same as fleet manager?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. And I think just before we took our brief break, you'd explained to me that your dispatcher that you were working with was new to you, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And although you'd only been exposed to them for [60]a short period of time, you hadn't had any problems or complaints with regard to their actions or instructions; is that correct?

A. Prior to —

Q. Up until?

A. Okay. Yes.

Q. Had you ever met the dispatcher?

A. No.

Q. Tell me what — what happened during the night, any other problems before you called your dispatcher?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the other problems?

A. He slapped me.

Q. Okay. Tell me about that.

A. We were going to deliver the load.

Q. What time is this?

A. Morning. I don't know what time in the morning.

Q. It's before you called the dispatcher?

A. It's before, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. On our way to deliver the load, and he asked me to read the directions off the Qualcom.

Q. Let me back up a second. Last we left off on your recollection of events, you were driving, he was back in the berth sleeping.

Appendix W

[61]A. Yes.

Q. So you drive through the night?

A. I drive to New York.

Q. Okay. What time do you get to New York?

A. I just know it was morning.

Q. Sun is up?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it sometime between 6:00 a.m. and 9:00?

A. Sometime between there, yes.

Q. Okay.

A. And it's his turn to drive now.

Q. Okay.

A. So he's driving.

Q. Do you know when his shift started?

A. No.

Q. Okay. How long do you drive before your shift ends?

A. You can drive anywhere to 10 to 11 hours. I don't remember how many I drove that night, but you can drive anywhere to 10 to 11, and then after that you have to go to lay down or you can't drive anymore at least.

Q. How do you decide when your shift ends?

A. After you've completed that time frame the 10 or 11 hours.

Q. You always drive for 10 or 11 hours straight; is [62]that's correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You can't say after 8, I'm tired, somebody else drive?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. You have to do your part.

Q. During the time you drove 10 to 11 hours until you got to New York —

A. Yeah.

Q. — were there any problems during that period of time?

A. No.

Q. So he just stayed back in the berth?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he ever come out up into the cab?

A. Not that I recall.

Q. At some point in time, was it when you got to New York, that he came out of the berth and up into the cab?

A. Yes, because it was his turn to drive.

Q. All right. Then what happened?

A. So he asked me to read the directions from the Qualcom.

Q. He's driving now.

A. He's driving.

[63]Q. Okay.

A. The directions say Exit 11B. When we got to Exit 11, and there was no letters after it, I told him that he needed to turn around. He told me that it said Exit 11B so he was going to keep going. So he kept going, he hit a toll booth. Now, he got upset because he had to pay a toll. I explained to him that they pay it back, don't jump the tolls, CRST will pay it back. So the lady told him, You need to turn around because there is no Exit 11B, and when he got back on the freeway, he hit another tollbooth. So itw was funny to me. I'm over there busting a seam and crying I'm laughing so hard. So when we get back to Exit 11, I called the Casenec, that's the person we deliver to. Where are you guys located? And they tell me it was Exit 11. I said, see, I told you it was Exit 11, and he smacked me.

Q. So he's in the driver's seat?

A. Yeah.

Q. Tell me, specifically, how the slap occurred.

A. After I made my comment that I told you it was at Exit 11, he slapped me.

Q. Palm of his hand?

A. Palm of the hand, yeah. But it wasn't one of those slap the taste out your mouth slaps, but it made [64]my head fly to the side. It stung pretty good. It stung pretty good.

Q. He slaps you on your left cheek?

A. I think it was the left cheek, yeah, it was the left cheek.

Q. And you say, "it wasn't one of those slap the taste out of your mouth slaps"?

A. No, but it was hard. It was hard.

Q. Leave a mark?

A. No. I went to the restroom to check and it did not, because I had planned on calling the police. But it didn't leave a mark, and I felt like it would be his word against mine, so at that point I called the dispatcher and said get me off the truck.

Q. Did you say anything to him when he slapped you?

A. Yeah.

Q. What did you say?

A. I asked him. What was the fuck was his problem. I told him that he better be lucky that I'm older than what I am now (sic), because there would have been consequences, repercussions had I been younger, because I wouldn't have thought about it before I reacted.

Q. What did you mean?

A. I would have gotten back — we would have been in that truck fighting for the most part because you hit [65]me. I am from Compton, the hood, and you just don't get away with slapping people or hitting people like that where I'm from, we fight back. But now that I'm older, I think before I react, so I didn't want to go to jail, I just left it alone, and I called the dispatcher and said get me off the truck before something else happens. Because you hit me once, you'll hit me twice, I just wanted to get off the truck.

Q. Where were you when the slap occurred?

A. New York at a truck stop on Exit 11.

Q. So you're actually stopped at the time it occurred?

A. Yes.

Q. So it was after that occurred, that's the first time you called in to your dispatcher?

A. Called the dispatcher to let him know what was going on.

Q. In your recollection, it was sometime in the morning?

A. Yeah. It was still morning.

Q. Any idea what time?

A. It had to be getting closer to noon by that time, but I'm not sure probably somewhere between 10:00 or 11ish.

Q. And this would have been on October 2nd, second [66]day?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you indicate to Chuck that you were either going to call the police or the dispatcher to report the behavior?

A. No. At that point, I was scared of Chuck.

Q. How big of a man is he?

A. Not that big, not that big. He's taller than me, but it don't take much to be taller than me. But just being a man in general, you don't have to be big and burly, they are pretty strong. So I wanted to get out the truck because I didn't want it to come to me having to defend myself, but if I got hit again, I was going to defend myself.

Q. Tell me about the conversation with the dispatcher.

A. I told him basically everything that I told you. I told him about the guy jumping on me the night before trying to pull my breast up out my shirt. I told him about being hit the next morning and that I wanted off the truck. He told me he was going to get me off the truck. He was going to send a message through. I never got that message. Instead, we got sent the trip pack for another load going to Wisconsin.

Q. All right. Let me — I need to walk through this [67]because I don't know enough about the trucking profession to make sure that I understand what that means. When you talked with the dispatcher, he indicated that he was going to get you off?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you understand that to mean?

A. Well, that mean — that meant he was going to get me off the truck. There was a terminal in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and it's not far from where we were.

Q. Not far, what does that mean?

A. Probably 100 something miles away, if that.

Q. Okay.

A. And he told me that he just needed me to drop off that one load, we had another load to pick up around the corner, and bring that into Carlisle, and he'd get me off the truck and I said, Okay.

Q. Were you okay with that proposal?

A. As long as I got off the truck, I was okay with that. Because I felt like I could keep my mouth shut, and he would leave me alone long enough for me to get off this truck.

Q. Did you have any discussion about staying at the truck stop that you were at —

A. No.

Q. — with your dispatcher?

[68]A. No. He just told me that I needed to be routed to the Carlisle terminal, so I thought that was just how they did it.

[70]Q. Tell me, specifically, what it was you told the dispatcher as best you can recall, the exact words that you used.

A. I told him that the guy had jumped on me and pulled my breast up out my shirt, and that he had slapped me, and I wanted off the truck, that was just as basic as it got. I want off the truck.

Q. And then what was your expectation as far as the instructions to go to Carlisle; how did you think that it would be communicated to Chuck?

A. He told me that he was going to route us through Carlisle, which simply meant, when they give you the trip pack, it'll have something in the middle of it, you know, go to Carlisle — from New York, go to Carlisle; and then from Carlisle, go to Wisconsin.

Q. How do you get your trip pack?

A. They send it over through the Qualcom and tell you what you need to go pick up, the directions, and the whole nine.

Q. And how did you reach the dispatcher, was it through a cell phone?

A. I want to say I used a pay phone. I don't remember. I don't remember if I used a cell phone or a [71]pay phone.

Q. Could have been a pay phone at the truck stop or your cell phone?

A. Could have been my cell phone, I don't remember.

Q. And you had a cell phone?

A. Yeah. But I had prepaid — it was probably a pay phone, because I had a prepaid cell phone.

Q. Other that calling your dispatcher to report what was happening, did you call anyone else during this time frame to report what was hopping?

A. No. No. Like I said, initially, I thought to call the police, but when I didn't see a mark on my face, I figured it was my word against his, so it would be a waste of time.

Q. Did your dispatcher recommend that you call the police?

A. I don't remember.

(Deposition Exhibit No. 702 marked.)

Q. (BY MS. HEFFERN) Ms. Ross, I'm going to hand you what's been marked as Exhibit 702. And as I hand this to you, I'm going to tell you that I think this is your written statement. It's two pages, unfortunately, I think your written statement was three and that we are missing one page which we are trying to track down.

A. That's my handwriting.

[72]Q. I'm going to give you a minute to look at that. I think you've indicated that is your handwriting; is that a yes?

A. Yes. I'm sorry. Yeah.

Q. Would you take a look at it and verify my suspicion that we're missing one page?

A. It was Exit 6, my bad. It wasn't Exit 11. I forgot about that.

Q. What's that?

A. That after he slapped me and I asked him what he slapped me for, he said he was just playing. I was just playing with you. Yeah. I forgot about that. Oh, yeah, there's something missing.

Q. I think there is a third page, and we're working to get that?

A. Yeah, but the second page is missing.

Q. We don't have much notice who is going to appear, so we have to scramble to get the records, so I will supplement that once we get it.

A. Was I supposed to give you this one back too?

Q. You've had a chance to review this statement, and I know you've indicated that as you reviewed it, you did recall the comment he made after slapping; otherwise, is at least what we have here today appear to be an accurate report of what happened at that time?

[73]A. Yeah.

Q. And you were explaining to me that your dispatcher indicated he was going to route you through Carlisle where you were going to be to get off at the terminal?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened after that?

A. The dispatcher dropped the ball. Instead of sending the directions including a stopover in Carlisle, he sent directions going straight to Wisconsin.

Q. Okay.

A. So I then told Chuck that we were supposed to be stopping in Carlisle, and he told me it wasn't in the directions, and he wasn't going to stop. I told him, yes, he was, because we were supposed to stop in Carlisle. I never once mentioned the fact that I was getting off the truck, you know. I was trying to keep the peace. So I said Well, pull over at this rest area, and I'm going to call dispatch. So I called dispatch and was waiting and waiting, at night, there's only three of them, so you tend to wait for a while. While I was waiting on dispatch, my mother called me. I told my mom what happened, she got off the phone with me, she started calling dispatch too. I got back on the phone started calling dispatch again, got another [74]call from my boyfriend at the time. And I told him what happened, and he did the same thing, he called dispatch too, and I think all three of us got in the at the same time to three different dispatchers. I explained what happened, and they would send the messages through right away. I explained to them if they checked the records, they would see that I had been sending message after message after message all day and part of that night the prior night before asking them to get me off this truck because I was afraid of what might happen next. And I was erasing the messages after I sent them because I didn't want him to see them, because, again, I'm trying to keep the peace. So they read everything, they said, Okay, we're going to get you routed through Carlisle; they sent the directions over right away for us to come to Carlisle.

Q. All right. We need to back up here just a minute. It was my understanding the first time you reported any problems was the call to the dispatcher?

A. No. I want to say — I sent messages, now, I don't know if I sent the messages before the call or after the call, but I was sending messages, I know for a fact after, but I don't know if it was before. But I sent detailed messages through the Qualcom to the dispatcher begging to get off the truck. Then I asked [75]them when they send a message back, Watch how they send it, because I didn't want him to know that I was sending messages to them.

Q. Let's back up and see if we can sort out at least your best recollection. You know you sent Qualcom messages —

A. Yes.

Q. — asking to get off the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. Probably about three.

Q. Okay.

A. After the initial phone call, probably about three.

Q. Is it your best recollection that the initial report was by phone as opposed to Qualcom?

A. I think so, yeah. Like I said, I don't remember when I started sending the messages asking to get off the truck, but I think I called first.

Q. And that would have been from the truck stop in New York?

A, Yeah, yeah.

Q. And then — so you're at New York and your waiting for your trip information?

A. Yeah.

[76]Q. Do you recall when you get that?

A. We got that, I believe, during the time that we were dropping off the first load because the second one was, maybe, about a block or two away. It wasn't nowhere from there. The one that was actually headed to Wisconsin, so I think we got the information while we were waiting for that truck to be unloaded off the first load.

Q. So is this still the morning of the 2nd?

A. Yes.

Q. And so then you go to the place to pick up the new load?

A. It might have been the afternoon. I don't remember. But, yeah, we go pick up the second load.

Q. Okay. And then you get out on the road?

A. Yeah.

Q. And by then, you already have all your trip information, and you know that it doesn't have the stop in Carlisle?

A. Exactly.

Q. When you realize that, as you described, the dispatcher has dropped the ball, do you communicate with him through Qualcom?

A. Qualcom, that's when I started sending messages through the Qualcom, I think.

[77]Q. And do you remember what you said?

A. No. I just know it had something to do with getting me off that truck.

Q. Okay. Can you tell whether the dispatch is receiving those on the Qualcom; does it have any kind of —

A. Not unless they send you a message back, no.

Q. So I take it Chuck is still driving?

A. Yes, he was still driving at that point, yeah.

Q. Do you remember getting a response to the Qualcom?

A. No, I can't say that I remember.

Q. Other than sending the Qualcom which you've estimated roughly three, do you try and reach your dispatcher any other way?

A. Yeah, that was when we pulled over at the rest area, and I started calling. I didn't want to call the dispatcher while I was in the truck, because he would overhear my conversation.

Q. Okay.

A. So that was the reason for the Qualcom messages, but after we pulled over at the rest area, I called here.

Q. How long had you been driving before you pulled over at the rest stop?

[78]A. We were — I don't know where we were. But we weren't far from Pennsylvania; we were still going the right direction.

Q. How long had it been since you picked up the load and started?

A. I don't know. Some hours, I don't remember how many though.

Q. Can you quantify it in any way for me?

A. I just don't remember.

Q. Well, less than three?

A. Maybe, yeah, maybe.

Q. If we look at from the time you made the call, the first call, until the time you stopped at the rest stop, can you quantify that time period?

A. Maybe a couple hours, maybe 3 hours, I'm not sure.

Q. So best estimate is somewhere between two to three hours from the time you made the first call to the dispatcher to the time you made the second call?

A. Yes.

Q. And within that two - to three-hour period, you were also sending some — two to three Qualcom messages?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. When you asked Chuck to pull over, he did?

A. He did.

[79]Q. Were there any other problems after the slap — between the time of the slap and stopping at the rest stop as far as Chuck's behavior?

A. Not that I remember, no. I pretty much stayed back there in the sleeping berth to myself.

Q. When you got to the rest stop and got a hold of dispatch, tell me about that conversation, what you said, what the person who you were talking to said.

A. I told them in short what had happened to me about him, you know, jumping on me, trying to take my breast up out of my shirt and also —

Q. You repeated the same information?

A. — him slapping me. Yeah.

Q. Is this a different dispatcher?

A. Yeah. It was the night dispatcher, because my dispatcher had left for the day.

Q. What time is it, then?

A. Maybe — I don't know. It was dark, but I don't remember what time it was. I don't — maybe 6:00, 5:00, I don't know.

Q. You still comfortable with the time frame you gave me before, which is two to three hours had passed from the time you left?

A. Like I said, I don't know. I didn't know how many hours, I'm assuming maybe three or four.

[80]Q. Okay.

A. I don't remember. I don't remember. It's been awhile.

Q. Okay. Do you remember who you talked to on the second phone call?

A. No. I just know it was one of the night dispatchers.

Q. Okay. And you told him about finding him on top of you with his hand on your beast and what else?

A. And that he had hit me.

Q. Okay.

A. And that I had asked my dispatcher to get me off the truck, and had he dropped the ball, and I needed off the truck, and that's when I told him he could read those messages that I had been sending to see what I'm talking about and I needed off the truck. And immediately, he sent the message through to get me to Carlisle, and we went on out to Carlisle.

Q. Were you able to get off the truck at Carlisle?

A. I was.

Q. Any other problems before you got to Carlisle?

A. No, no. He was complaining about having to go to Carlisle, because it wasn't in the direction of Wisconsin, but no, no.

Q. Okay. Once you got to Carlisle, what did CRST [81]provide for you?

A. A cab and a room to stay in since I was getting off of the truck.

Q. Were you satisfied with them providing those things for you?

A. As long as off the truck, yeah.

Q. Tell me what your criticisms are with regard to how CRST responded to your complaints.

A. Well, I'm upset at the fact that the first dispatcher didn't do anything about it. That pisses me off.

Q. Do you have any reason to believe that that was deliberate or whether that was just, as you say, dropping the ball?

A. I don't know. I don't know. I have no reason to believe that, you know, he would have had a problem with me in general, so I would like to think that it wasn't deliberate, but I don't know.

[90]Q. (BY MS. HEFFERN) Ms. Ross, before we leave, Exhibit 702, I want to ask a couple other follow-up questions about that statement. Specifically, I'm interested in the circumstances under which you wrote that. Do you remember when it was you wrote it and what [91]caused you to write it up?

A. Yeah. I went to — I went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, which is where the corporate office is to drop off a load — or I don't remember what we were out there for, but we were out there. And they have a driver's meeting where the drivers can come in, we eat for free, you know, pizza and soda, and they have some of the big wigs there. And they basically talked to us about, you know, policies and changes and, you know, if we have any issues, we can talk to them about it, any grievances. So after the meeting was over with, I decided that I would talk to, I want to say, he was the head of safety.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't remember, though.

Q. George?

A. George, exactly, yeah.

Q. All right.

A. Yep, that's him. And I told him what happened — no, I asked him, I said what's your policy on sexual harassment? And he said, Zero tolerance, and I said, Bullshit, and he said, We need to talk. So he took me over to the office and I explained to him what had happened to me and the fact that to me it seemed like nobody wanted to do anything about it. Immediately, we walked over to the dispatcher, the guy who was my [92]dispatcher at the time who I still can't remember his name, but —

Q. The same guy you had talked to for the first report —

A. Yeah.

Q. — and the morning at the hotel?

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay.

A. So he went over and he asked him why he didn't follow the proper procedures. And he said that a lot of females want off the truck, and they'll lie and say whatever is necessary to get off of it and get a new codriver, so he thought that it was just another situation like that.

Q. This was a conversation that you were present for?

A. Yes.

Q. So it's the three of you George, your dispatcher, and yourself?

A. That's correct.

[101]Q. What's the first thing George says to the dispatcher?

A. He wanted to know what had happened with the [102]incident with me.

Q. What does he say?

A. I don't remember exactly what was said, but I just remember him asking about the incident.

Q. Okay.

A. That had occurred with me trying to get off that truck.

Q. And then what does the dispatcher respond?

A. He had asked him, you know, why the proper procedures weren't followed and that's when he had told them that a lot of females lie to get off the truck just so they can get a new codriver, and he had assumed that that was — the same thing that happened with me that I just wanted to get off the truck with Chuck.

Q. Well, you can get off the truck without —

A. Exactly.

Q. — claiming sexual harassment, right?

A. Exactly.

Q. Any time you want off the truck for any reason —

A. You can ask. You can ask.

Q. It's totally up to you when you get a new codriver?

A. Exactly.

Q. And what was George's response?

A. I don't know. I don't remember what he said.

[103]Q. What was his demeanor?

A. Cranky, upset, he was angry. He was angry, I think, at the response that he got from the dispatcher, but, of course, that's just my thinking. He didn't look happy any way; he didn't look like he looked at first. Like I said, he looked really concerned at first, and it went to concerned to agitated, angry, you know, something like that.

Q. You think George's response to your report was appropriate?

A. I do. I do.

Q. Okay. Then what happened?

A. We went back to the office.

Q. That was the end of the conversation with —

A. I don't remember what was said between them two after the fact, but the next thing I remember is the office. I remember being back in the office talking to the head of HR, whoever it was in HR.

Q. You don't remember how you got to HR, but you remember —

A. No, no, no, I didn't — they came to us.

Q. Where?

A. They came to the building that we were in — that George was in and the dispatchers were in, it's a building on the other side of the — [104]Q. So HR meets you at the place where you're talking to the dispatcher?

A. HR meets me in the room that me and George were sitting in. Me and George had gone back to the room.

Q. You left your dispatcher and went back to the office?

A. Yeah.

Q. When you say HR —

A. Human resources.

Q. I understand that. Who, who?

A. I don't remember his name. It was a guy.

Q. Okay. And when what happened?

A. He asked me what had happened, and he told me to write it down.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't remember if I signed anything else, but I remember I had to write everything down that I had told — there it is, his name is Jim. I had to write everything down that had occurred, and I don't remember if I signed anything else, but this part I remember doing.

Q. And then what?

A. They told me that it would get taken care of that they could not tell me what type of disciplinary action would be taken, but it would be taken care of. That was [105]it.

Q. And did you ever hear anything further?

A. I got a call from Jim again, and he told me he had spoken with Chuck and that it was taken care of, but he, again, couldn't tell me what action had been taken.

Q. Did he tell you whether or not Chuck admitted to or denied the allegations?

A. I don't remember. I don't remember him going into detail about the conversation that they had just that he had spoken with him, and it would be taken care of, that's about all I remember.

Q. At that point, did you feel that your complaint had been adequately addressed?

A. I did. I did.

ORDER

Appendix X

I. INTRODUCTION

The matter before the court is the "Motion Under Rule 16(f) for an Order to Show Cause Concerning the EEOC's Identification of Class Members" ("Motion") (docket no. 56). The court held a hearing ("Hearing") on the Motion on November 12, 2008. Attorneys Jean Kamp and Brian Tyndall represented Plaintiff Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("the EEOC"). Attorneys Kevin Visser, Thomas Wolle, John Mathias and Robert Markowski represented Defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST").[1] The Motion is fully submitted and ready for decision.

II. PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On November 16, 2007, the EEOC filed the First Amended Complaint (docket no. 8) against CRST. Pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1), the EEOC brings suit in its own name "to correct [CRST's] unlawful employment practices on the basis of sex, and to provide appropriate relief to [Ms. Monika Stark] and a class of similarly situated female employees of [CRST] who were adversely affected by such practices." First Amended Complaint at 1; see Gen. Tele. Co. of Nw., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 324, 100 S. Ct. 1698, 64 L. Ed. 2d 319 (1980) (stating that § 2000e-5(f)(1) grants the EEOC "authority to bring suit in its own name for the purpose . . . of securing relief for a group of aggrieved individuals"). The EEOC alleges CRST engaged in a pattern or practice of sex discrimination against its female truck drivers, in violation of 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2 and 2000e-3. Specifically, the EEOC alleges:

> 7. Since at least July 2005, CRST engaged in unlawful employment practices . . . . [T]wo of its lead drivers subjected [Ms. Stark] to sexual harassment . . . (including . . . unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments), which further created a sexually hostile and offensive work environment. . . .
> 8. Other similarly situated female employees of CRST were also subjected to [similar] sexual harassment and a sexually hostile and offensive work environment while working for CRST, from their lead drivers or team drivers . . . .
> 9. The effect of [such] practices . . . has been to deprive [Ms. Stark] and class of similarly situated female employees of equal employment opportunities, and to otherwise adversely affect their status as employees, because of sex.

First Amended Complaint at 2-3. The EEOC alleges CRST refused to take prompt and appropriate action to prevent, correct and protect its female truck drivers from the harassment and the hostile environment. The EEOC seeks compensatory damages, punitive damages and injunctive relief on behalf of Ms. Stark and the other similarly situated women.

On May 1, 2008, CRST filed an Amended Answer (docket no. 36). CRST denies the substance of the First Amended Complaint.

On February 8, 2008, the court entered a Scheduling Order and Discovery Plan ("Scheduling Order") (docket no. 21), pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 16(b) and 26(f) and Local Rule 16. The parties had proposed various deadlines to the court, and the court accepted them. The court set the following deadlines: initial disclosures—February 27, 2008; motions to add parties—May 1, 2008; motions to amend pleadings—May 1, 2008; expert witnesses—August 7, 2008 (Plaintiff), October 7, 2008 (Defendant) and November 7, 2008 (Plaintiff's rebuttal); completion of discovery—December 7, 2008; dispositive motions—January 15, 2009; and trial ready—May 15, 2009. The court later scheduled a jury trial for the two-week period beginning on June 15, 2009.

On August 7, 2008, the EEOC filed a Motion to Modify Scheduling Order (docket no. 37). The EEOC asked the court to continue the "deadlines for identification and discovery of treating medical or psychological witnesses only" to November 7, 2008. Motion to Modify at 1. The EEOC indicated it was still in the process of identifying aggrieved individuals and wished to reserve the opportunity to call their treating medical or psychological witnesses at trial.

Appendix X

On August 8, 2008, CRST filed a Response (docket no. 38). CRST argued:

> [U]ntil the EEOC completes the identification of women on whose behalf it seeks relief in this lawsuit . . . it is not possible to set a definite schedule for expert disclosures or for completing other fact discovery to which CRST is entitled before CRST is required to produce expert reports. At the present time, . . . CRST cannot evaluate the practicality of the EEOC's proposed schedule modifications. Likewise, CRST is not in a position to make representations to the [c]ourt regarding the feasability of other aspects of the discovery schedule, including the December 7[, 2008,] discovery cut-off date.
> According to [the EEOC], it is still "in the process of identifying class members from, among other things, lists of drivers provided by [CRST]. Even though the EEOC proposes a deadline for the completion of expert discovery and appears to endorse the current discovery schedule in other respects, it offers no proposed end date for its identification of [allegedly aggrieved individuals]. Without knowing when this process will end, CRST cannot commit itself to dates for completing the fact and expert discovery to which it is entitled.

Response at 3. CRST suggested a deadline of September 4, 2008, "as the end date by which EEOC completes its identification of class members." Id. at 4.

On August 18, 2008, the EEOC filed a Reply (docket no. 42). The EEOC stated it had identified 49 aggrieved individuals after mailing thousands of letters to current and former CRST female drivers and soliciting their participation in this lawsuit. Reply at 1. The EEOC promised to identify "the bulk" of aggrieved individuals before October 15, 2008, and "expect[ed] the total class [would] reach between 100 and 150 individuals." Id. at 1-2. The EEOC suggested that the discovery deadline of December 7, 2008, serve as "the closing date" for identification. Id. at 2-3.

On August 20, 2008, Judge Scoles issued an Order Modifying Discovery Plan ("Order") (docket no. 44). Judge Scoles ruled:

> The [c]ourt concludes that a deadline for identifying class members should be established. After reviewing the parties' respective positions, the [c]ourt concludes that [the EEOC] should be required to disclose the identity of class members not later than October 15, 2008. The deadlines for disclosure of expert witnesses will be extended to November 1, 2008, December 1, 2008, and December 15, 2008, respectively.

Appendix X

> To accommodate the extensions, the [c]ourt also extends the discovery deadline to January 15, 2009, and the dispositive motions deadline to February 1, 2009. . . . .

Order at 2 (footnote omitted).

III. MERITS

A. Motion

On November 6, 2008, CRST filed the Motion. CRST contends the EEOC is attempting an end-run around the Order. Prior to the Order, the EEOC had a practice of not identifying a woman as an aggrieved individual until she affirmatively advised the EEOC that she wished to have the EEOC participate in this lawsuit on her behalf. After the Order, however, the EEOC adopted a new practice of "naming everyone and asking questions later." Brief in Support of Motion (docket no. 56-2), at 10.

On or before October 15, 2008, the EEOC "identified" a grand total of approximately 270 aggrieved individuals. (Although the EEOC actually disclosed 294 women, the EEOC admits its disclosures contain duplicates and a man.) CRST opines the EEOC's disclosures include women (1) who had not affirmatively agreed to participate in this lawsuit and (2) whom the EEOC did not have a good faith reason to believe were victims of actionable sex discrimination. CRST claims the EEOC's new practice violates the letter and spirit of the Order. CRST opines that, if allowed to stand, CRST's new practice would render the Order largely meaningless and "promises to impose a huge and unwarranted discovery expense on CRST and an even greater burden on the limited time and resources of this [c]ourt." Id. at 6.

CRST asks the court to strike two categories of women from the EEOC's disclosures. First, the court should strike all women who have not given the EEOC their informed consent to assert claims against CRST on their behalf. Second, CRST asks the court to strike "any women that the EEOC, as of the October 15 deadline, was unprepared to assert—consistent with the standards imposed by [Federal] Rule [of Civil Procedure] 11—were claiming to have experienced severe or pervasive sexual harassment." Id. at 7 (adopting the standard for pattern-or-practice claims set forth in EEOC v. Int'l Profit Assocs., Inc., No. 01-C-4427, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78378, 2007 WL 3120069 (N.D. Ill. Oct. 23, 2007)).

B. Resistance

On November 12, 2008, the EEOC filed a Resistance (docket no. 60). The EEOC "understood the Order to require that EEOC identify all persons for whom it intends to seek relief." Resistance (docket no. 60), at 5. The EEOC maintains it complied with the Order.

The EEOC maintains CRST's argument that the court should strike all women who have not given the EEOC their informed consent is based upon a false premise that such women must "opt in" to this lawsuit as if Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 governed. The EEOC states:

Appendix X

> [The] EEOC identified all women whom it had then discovered who meet its definition for the class for whom it seeks relief. [The] EEOC respectfully submits that as "master of its [own] case," it has sole discretion to determine the group of persons for whom to seek relief. Of course, it acknowledges the [c]ourt's right to set the deadline for identifying those persons for discovery purposes, and CRST's right to challenge, at the appropriate time, the substantive merits of each claim. [The] EEOC also acknowledges CRST's right to seek discovery, at the appropriate time, concerning each class member, and to seek relief if [the] EEOC is unable to provide the class member for deposition. In this case, [the] EEOC has not identified the very few women who have advised it that they do not wish to be included. It has had . . . personal contact with 132 of the identified class members, each of whom has provided credible evidence that she meets the criteria for class membership. [The] EEOC does intend to seek relief for []class members[] whom it has spoken to since October 15 and those whom it has thus far been unable to speak with personally, but who have made credible complaints included in CRST's investigative files, or who have communicated to [the] EEOC that they believe they are victims of harassment.

Id. at 10 (quoting EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 291, 122 S. Ct. 754, 151 L. Ed. 2d 755 (2002) (footnote omitted)).

Second, the EEOC denies CRST's allegation that the EEOC disclosed women whom the EEOC knew did not have viable claims of sex discrimination. While not conceding that CRST states the proper legal standard, the EEOC states it nonetheless had a good-faith belief that each of the approximately 270 identified aggrieved individuals suffered severe or pervasive sexual harassment.

C. Analysis

The court declines to strike all women who have not given the EEOC informed consent. The court agrees with the EEOC that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 does not apply here. See Gen Tele. Co., 446 U.S. at 324 ("[The EEOC's] authority . . . is in no way dependent upon Rule 23, and the Rule has no application to a § [2000e-5(f)(1)] suit."). There is no obligation for aggrieved individuals to "opt in" to the lawsuit; the EEOC may proceed on behalf of such individuals with or without their consent. The Supreme Court has stated:

> If it were true that the EEOC could prosecute its claim only with [an allegedly aggrieved individual's] consent . . . the [lower] court's analysis might be persuasive. But once a[n administrative] charge is filed, the exact opposite is true under the statute—the EEOC is in command of the process. The EEOC has exclusive jurisdiction over the claim for 180 days. During that time, the employee must obtain a right-to-sue letter from the agency before prosecuting the claim. If, however, the > EEOC files suit on its own, the employee has no independent cause of action, although the employee may intervene in the EEOC's suit. In fact, the EEOC takes the position that it may pursue a claim on the employee's behalf even after the employee has disavowed any desire to seek relief. The statute clearly makes the EEOC the master of its own case and confers on the agency the authority to evaluate the strength of the public interest at stake. [I]t is the [EEOC's] province—not that of the court—to determine whether public resources should be committed to the recovery of victim-specific relief. And if the [EEOC] makes that determination, the statutory text unambiguously authorizes it to proceed in a judicial forum.

Waffle House, 534 U.S. at 291-92 (citations omitted).

The court also declines to strike any other women from the EEOC's disclosure lists for any purported failure to comply with Rule 11. The EEOC represents to the court that, as of October 15, 2008, it had a good-faith belief that each and every one of the approximately 270 women disclosed to CRST has an actionable claim for sex discrimination. Further, the EEOC represents to the court that none of these women have advised the EEOC that they do not want the EEOC to pursue claims on their behalf. The court will take the EEOC's representations to the court at face value. The court takes the EEOC's representations at face value, because the court presumptively trusts members of the bar appearing in this court to tell the truth. Further, the court does not know, with any particularity, the underlying facts and circumstances that led the EEOC to disclose each allegedly aggrieved individual to CRST. If during the course of discovery CRST discovers evidence that sheds doubt on the EEOC's representations to the court, CRST may file an appropriate motion.

Although the EEOC is "the master of its own case," the court retains inherent case management authority. Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(f); Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b); LR 16. The court remains concerned that, absent further orders from the court, CRST might unfairly face a "moving target" of prospective plaintiffs as discovery winds down and trial approaches.

To forestall any prejudice to CRST, the court shall adopt the following three rules. First, the EEOC shall immediately file with the court a corrected list of the approximately 270 women it disclosed as of October 15, 2008. Second, the EEOC shall make all women on the list available to CRST for a deposition before the conclusion of discovery on January 15, 2008. If the EEOC fails to make a woman available, as a discovery sanction the court will not permit her to testify at trial and will bar the EEOC from seeking relief on her behalf in this case. Third, as soon as the EEOC learns that it no longer wishes to pursue individual claims on behalf of any of the women on the list, it must immediately inform CRST and file an amended disclosure list with the court.

Appendix X

Although the EEOC arguably did not comply with the spirit of the Order—the obvious purpose of the Order was to pin down the allegedly aggrieved individuals in this case as soon as possible—the court can discern little prejudice to CRST so long as these three rules are in place. CRST retains its right to conduct discovery of all persons who will pursue claims against it at trial.

The court recognizes that expert witness reports will be due before the close of discovery. CRST maintains that it will suffer prejudice, because its experts will not know when they write their reports whether this is truly a 270-person pattern-or-practice case. The court agrees that the number of aggrieved individuals seeking relief in this case is relevant to the merits. See, e.g., EEOC v. Dial Corp., 469 F.3d 735, 741 (8th Cir. 2006) (requiring plaintiffs to prove "'regular and purposeful' discrimination" and "show that more than an isolated act of discrimination occurred and that 'discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure") (quoting Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 339, 360, 97 S. Ct. 1843, 52 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1977)). Consistent with the EEOC's representations to the court, CRST may assume with some certainty that this is approximately a 270-person pattern-or-practice case. Should the EEOC's representations to the court turn out to be false, CRST may file an appropriate motion for sanctions and permission to file a supplemental or substituted expert report.

Appendix X

IV. OTHER ISSUES

The parties raised two other issues at the Hearing. The court discusses each issue, in turn.

A. Attorney-Client Privilege

In the Motion, CRST claims the EEOC is impermissibly asserting an attorney-client privilege with all of the approximately 270 aggrieved individuals, even though it does not have a consensual attorney-client relationship with the vast majority of them. CRST wants to talk with some of these women outside of the confines of a deposition to find out whether they might possess evidence beneficial to CRST's defense. The EEOC concedes it does not have an attorney-client relationship with such women but nonetheless asks the court to order CRST to refrain from speaking with them "about the subject matter of individual complaints of sex harassment." Id. at 12. At the Hearing, the EEOC expressed a concern about "the possibilities of intimidation."

The court holds that CRST may talk with all women with whom the EEOC does not have a consensual attorney-client relationship and may do so about any subject. The EEOC's proffered restriction on CRST's ability to contact these women is overbroad based on the record presently before the court. Cf. Gulf Oil Co. v. Bernard, 452 U.S. 89, 101-02, 101 S. Ct. 2193, 68 L. Ed. 2d 693 (1981) ("[A]n order limiting communications between parties and potential class members should be based on a clear record and specific findings that reflect a weighing of the need for a limitation and the potential interference with the rights of the parties."). There is no evidence to substantiate the EEOC's amorphous concern about intimidation. The court takes counsel for CRST at their word when they represent to the court that they will not engage in improper intimidation.

Within ten days, the EEOC shall file a list of all women with whom it claims an attorney-client relationship.

B. Bifurcation

In its Resistance and at the Hearing, the EEOC repeatedly expressed its position that the court should bifurcate trial into at least two phases. According to the EEOC, one jury would decide whether CRST engaged in a pattern or practice of sex discrimination. Only later would the parties conduct discovery as to the individual plaintiffs' damages and submit their claims to other juries and possibly a special master for final judgment. CRST insists that a single, unified proceeding is more manageable and points out that another case in which the EEOC's method of bifurcation was adopted is about to enter its eighth year.

The court has not agreed to bifurcation. Further, the parties did not agree to bifurcation of discovery and trial in the Scheduling Order. There is no written motion before the court on bifurcation or modification of the Scheduling Order and thus nothing upon which the court may rule. Therefore the parties should proceed with the assumption that the discovery deadline applies to the issues of liability as well as individual damages.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

DATED this 19th day of November, 2008.

[17]Q. And in between Habitat for Humanity and CRST is when you went to American Driving?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you pay your own tuition for the American Driving?

A. No.

Q. Did CRST pay your tuition?

A. Yes.

Q. And was that part of a contract that you had at CRST?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that contract obligate you to work for CRST for a certain length of time?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what length of time?

A. Six months.

Q. And what were the dates, do you recall, that you worked for CRST?

A. I believe it was October — no, I'm sorry, September of '04 — the first time I quit in April of '05, I believe, and I went back to them in June [18]of '05, I believe, and I only worked there for a couple of weeks.

[55]Q. Okay. Am I correct that you do allege that you were subjected to sexual harassment while you worked at CRST?

A. Yes.

Q. Who do you allege sexually harassed you?

A. Joe McCarthy, Raymond Coplan. And I forget the other guy's name. I believe it was Chris. I would have to look at my log books. Chris Evans, I believe it was.

Q. Okay. So starting with Joe McCarthy, what did Joe McCarthy do that you considered sexual harassment?

A. He promised me that if I did sexual favors for him that he would — he would pay for everything that was accrued on the road, like all my meals, my clothing, and that he would pass me.

Q. How soon after you got on the truck did he make that promise?

A. I would say probably two to three days.

Q. Was that the first thing he did that you considered sexual harassment?

A. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. (By Mr. Hirth): And did you make it clear to him that you were not interested in that kind of [56]arrangement?

A. No.

Q, No, you did not make it clear to him?

A. No.

Q. How did you respond to his offer?

A. At first I was leary of it, and I ended up giving in because of the amount of money I was making. I was 23 years old and naive.

Q. And when you say you gave in, do you mean you had sexual relationships with Mr. McCarthy?

A. Yes.

Q. And how long into your training with him did those relations begin?

A. Almost immediately. We — he took me to Boston my first week on the truck. I didn't even drive. He took me to his hometown in Boston and he took me to his house and he told me that I had to sleep in his bed with him because his daughter was in his other bed.

Q. And did you have sex with him on that occasion?

A. Not at that time. He — at first he was very nice, he just held me, and it progressively got worse. He started kissing on my neck and putting his hands down my pants.

Q. When was the first time that he kissed you?

[57]A. I believe it was the second night, I'm not sure.

Q. The second night?

A. In Boston.

Q. In Boston.

How many nights were you in Boston?

A. A week, I believe.

Q. And was that like home time?

A. For him.

Q. For him?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. But it was not considered home time for you?

A. No.

Q. Okay. So did you do any training during that week?

A. No.

Q. Okay. So — and I assume that you weren't paid during that week?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. You were paid. Okay.

So was your payment for training based on days as opposed to miles?

A. I believe so because he was an owner-operator.

Q. Okay. So were you paid by him as opposed to by CRST or were you paid by CRST?

A. I believe l was paid by CRST through him, but I'm not exactly sure how that worked.

[58]Q. Okay. So he owned his own truck?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So the second night in Boston, he kissed you. Did anything else happen the second night of a sexual nature?

A. Yes. He tried putting his hands down my pants.

Q. And did you say anything to him at the time?

A. Not verbally, no.

Q. Did you indicate anything to him at the time?

A. I tried to take his hands out of my pants.

Q. And so that was the third night — I'm sorry, the second night.

On the third night in Boston, what happened on the third night?

A. He was more forceful, I believe.

Q. And did you have sex with him on the third night?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Did you resist his sexual offer or sexual advances?

A. Not very much, but a little bit.

Q. Did you try to make him aware that you were uncomfortable with the situation?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you do that?

A. I told him I didn't feel right.

Q. Didn't feel right in terms of didn't feel healthy [59]or didn't feel right having sex with him?

A. Didn't feel right having sex with him.

Q. But you did have sex with him that night, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And for the — you said you were in Boston about a week, so three or four more nights?

A. Uh-hum.

Q. And did you continue to have sex with him on those subsequent nights?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do during the day during that time?

A. He took me around to different places in Boston, took me on train rides.

Q. Sort of like touring the city?

A. Yeah.

Q. Did you go out to dinner, things like that?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. After his home time was done and you got back on the truck, did you continue to have sexual relations with him on the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall when this was that you were in Boston, the dates?

A. I don't recall. It was my very first week of training.

[60]Q. Okay. Do you recall if it was in October?

A. I believe so.

Q. Okay. So you headed back out on the road to continue your training for the second week, and during that second week, how many times would you say you had sex with him?

A. I believe it was every day he would ask me for either sex or blow jobs.

Q. And you did both?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that continue into the third week of training also?

A. Yes.

Q. And the fourth week?

A. Yes.

Q. So is it fair to say that it happened basically daily the entire time that you were training?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. After the initial resistance that — when you took his hands out of your pants and made it clear to him that — or told him that you didn't feel right, did you make further attempts to tell him that you were uncomfortable with the situation?

A. No, because he promised me that I would — if I did what he wanted me to, that I would make a lot of [61]money driving.

Q. Okay. And did you report Mr. McCarthy's conduct to anyone at CRST?

A. Yes.

Q. Who did you report it to?

A. Sue and his dispatcher.

Q. Sue Ayers?

A. Yes.

Q. I think her name may be — it was Sue Ayers at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. And to his dispatcher?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall his dispatcher's name?

A. I don't.

Q. Do you recall how long into your training the first time you — how many days into your training you called Sue Ayers for the first time?

A. I told Sue after the training was done.

Q. After the training was done. Okay.

So after you got off the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. And the same for Mr. McCarthy's dispatcher, you told him after you got off?

A. Yes, I told him at the same time.

[64]Q. And when you spoke to the dispatchers, what did you tell them happened?

A. I told Sue that Joe offered me money for sexual favors and that I didn't have to drive very much because I was doing this for him.

Q. Did you tell her anything else?

A. That he was probably doing it to his new trainee, also.

Q. How did — are you aware of any action that Sue took in response to what you said?

A. I don't believe she took any action.

Q. Did you ask for any particular result? Did you ask that he be fired or disciplined or did you just report what happened?

[65]A. I just reported it.

Q. Okay. And the other dispatcher?

A. He didn't want anything to do with it.

Q. Okay. So when you told him about it, did he — how did he make you aware that he didn't want anything to do with it?

A. He said, "I'm not your dispatcher. You need to go talk to your dispatcher."

Q. Okay. Did Sue tell you to talk to human resources?

A. No. She said that she would speak with her boss.

Q. And then did you get on another truck at Cedar Rapids and continue driving?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Do you remember who your next — I guess it would have been a co-driver at this point?

A. Yes. I believe it was Chris Evans.

Q. And how did you come to drive with Mr. Evans; did you meet him before or was he — just assigned to his truck?

A. He was just assigned.

Q. Okay. Was he an owner-operator as well?

A. No.

Q. So were you assigned to the truck that he was on or were you both assigned to a truck together?

A. I believe I already had a truck and he was assigned [66]to my truck.

Q. He was assigned to yours. Okay.

And how long did you drive with Mr. Evans?

A. I believe it was only a couple of weeks.

Q. And did Mr. Evans sexually harass you?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he do?

A. He would try to rub my shoulders while I was driving and I told him to keep his hands off of me. He would also ask me why I wouldn't be with an older man like him and I told him he was old enough to be my father.

Q. Did he do anything else?

A. He just continually tried to rub my shoulders while I was driving and I kept telling him not to touch me.

Q. Did he touch any part of you other than your shoulders?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Did he ever directly ask for sex?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Did he ever offer you money for sex?

A. No.

Q. Did you report Mr. Evans' conduct to anyone at CRST?

[67]A. Yes.

Q. Who did you report it to?

A. Sue.

Q. And when did you report it?

A. Immediately.

Q. While you were still in the truck with him?

A. Yes.

Q. How long — when you got on the truck with Mr. Evans, how long was it until the first time that he did something that you considered sexual harassment?

A. Probably a week.

Q. So the first week he didn't do anything?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And so the first time he did something that second week, that's when you contacted Sue?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you — did you contact her by Qualcomm?

A. I believe it was Qualcomm, might have been my cell phone, I don't remember.

Q. And what did you tell her?

A. I told her that I needed a new co-driver because he wouldn't quit trying to touch me.

Q. And you said you only drove with him for a couple of weeks, and this started in the second week, so [68]you were with him then for about a week that this was happening?

A. Yes. We were driving back from California.

Q. Okay. And where did you get off the truck with — or did he get off your truck, I guess?

A. I ended up packing up my stuff off my truck and going into the truck stop at Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Q. When you asked Sue for a new co-driver and you told her why you wanted a new co-driver, how did she respond?

A. She asked me if I could stick it out a little bit longer.

Q. And what did you say?

A. I said no.

Q. And did she respond to that?

A. No. I believe we got off the phone after that and I immediately took all my stuff off the truck. I took my CB out, I packed everything into trash bags and got off the truck before he came back out.

Q. That was in Carlisle?

A. Yes.

Q. So you — this is when you talked — you talked to her when you were in Carlisle?

A. Yes.

[69]Q. Okay. And that was at the end of the second week?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Did you talk to her before that?

A. I believe so, when we were in California when it first started. I could be wrong, though. It was four years ago.

Q. And do you recall if she responded or how she responded?

A. I don't recall that, no.

Q. Is it possible that you didn't contact her until you got to Carlisle?

A. It is possible, but not likely because I was pretty on top of it with him.

Q. Did you pass any other — or go through any other CRST terminals on the way back from California?

A. No.

Q. Did you start out from a CRST terminal in California?

A. I believe so.

Q. Fontana?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And had Mr. Evans already begun the conduct that you found objectionable before you got to Fontana?

A. I believe he tried to rub my shoulders once before [70]that and I told him not to touch me and he didn't. He quit.

Q. And then started again after you got back on the road?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So when you were in Fontana, you didn't believe that you needed to get off the truck at that point?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Between Fontana and Carlisle, did you contact Sue Ayers?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Did you contact anyone else at CRST?

A. Not at CRST, no.

Q. Did you contact — so you didn't call HR?

A. No.

Q. Did you tell anyone else?

A. My family.

Q. Mother, father, sister again?

A. Yes. Those are the only people I had to talk to.

Q. And you talked to them by phone?

A. Yes.

Q. So you had your cell phone with you on the truck?

[71]A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And you knew how to use the Qualcomm?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So you got to Carlisle, you talked to Sue, she asked you to stick it out, you got off the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. And then did you — were you paired with another driver after that?

A. I don't believe so. I think that's when I started driving by myself for a little while.

Q. For CRST?

A. Yes, which is actually against the law.

Q. Did they ask you to drive solo?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ask for a co-driver?

A. Yes. I asked for a female co-driver.

Q. Did you eventually get a co-driver?

A. Yes.

Q. And who was that?

A. Ray Coplan. Sue told me there was no females available.

Q. How long did you drive by yourself before you were paired up with Ray Coplan?

A. I am not sure. I think it was a week.

[72]Q. And then how long were you on the truck with Mr. Coplan?

A. A month.

Q. And I believe you testified earlier that you believe Mr. Coplan also sexually harassed you?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What did he do?

A. I'm sorry. Ray Coplan threatened my life. He — when he first got on the truck, I didn't think anything of it. He looked at me and said, "'Watch, I'm going to fuck you." And I thought he was joking.

Q. That was the first day you got on the truck?

A. First day he got on the truck. I picked him up in Ohio.

Q. Okay. What else did he do?

A. I believe I drove that first day and he didn't do anything, and when we stopped to take a break, he insisted that I sleep in the same bed with him. I tried to sleep on the top bunk and he told me that if I didn't sleep on the bottom bunk with him, he would leave me on the side of the road.

Q. And that was the second night or first night?

A. I believe that was the second night.

Q. Second night. Okay.

[73]And did you have sex with him that night?

A. I don't believe it was that night. He made me sleep in bed with him and I think it was the very next night that he held me down, he was on top of me, and he forced sex upon me.

Q. Was that the only time he did that or did he do —

A. No.

Q. — it again?

A. He did that multiple times.

Q. Was it a daily occurrence?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said you were on the truck with him for about a month?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. So this went on for quite some time?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he do anything else that you considered to be sexual harassment?

A. Like what? There's nothing more that he could have done.

Q. Did he make other comments?

A. No, other than threatening my life a few times.

Q. How did he threaten your life?

A. I told him that I was going to tell CRST and I was going to just stay in the truck stop and he told me [74]that he would kill me if I did.

Q. How long into your teaming with him did that — did he first threaten you?

A. It was the first week.

Q. And did you attempt to get off the truck at other times?

A. Yes. I tried to sell Sue about it over the Qualcomm and he just kept watching over everything I did. I couldn't even make a phone call without him being right there.

Q. So were you able to say what had happened on the Qualcomm?

A. No. I just told her I needed to get off the truck.

Q. Did you — were you able to call her? You said he was around.

A. I wasn't able to call her because he was always right there.

Q. Were you able to call anyone else?

A. No.

Q. Were you able to call your family?

A. No.

Q. Did you get a response from Sue when you asked to get off the truck by the Qualcomm?

A. Yes.

Q. What did she say?

[75]A. I believe she asked me why and I couldn't tell her at that time because he was right there.

Q. When did you eventually get off the truck?

A. He actually had to go home for a family emergency, thankfully.

Q. Do you recall where you were when that happened?

A. I believe we were in Ohio.

Q. So did he get off the truck and you stayed on the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And what did you do immediately after he got off the truck?

A. I drove by myself for awhile.

Q. Do you remember where you drove?

Appendix Y

A. I believe I drove back to Louisa, Kentucky, to the driving academy.

Q. After he got off the truck, did you call Sue again to tell her what had happened?

A. No. I waited until I was able to get back to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and I believe I spoke with the HR. That was one of the head people that I spoke with.

Q. You don't recall if it was a man or a woman?

A. It was a man.

Q. Does Jim Barnes sound like the right name or Bob Freeman?

[76]A. They sound familiar, but I couldn't tell you.

Q. It's a long time ago.

So did you talk to Sue first and then go to HR, or did you go directly to HR?

A. No, I went directly to HR.

Q. And what did you tell HR had happened?

A. I told them that Ray had held me down and forced me to have sex with him and that he had threatened my life and I was scared to death of him.

EEOC MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT'S MOTION UNDER RULE 16(f) FOR AN ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE CONCERNING THE EEOC'S IDENTIFICATION OF CLASS MEMBERS

Appendix Z

CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") has requested the Court to sanction plaintiff, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"), for failure to comply with the Court's discovery Order of August 20, 2008, requiring EEOC to identify class members by October 15, 2008. EEOC has, in fact, fully complied with that Order, and the motion should be denied.

By October 15, 2008, EEOC identified 268 class members. Despite this obvious compliance with the Court's Order, CRST challenges the inclusion of three groups of class members: those whom it speculates that EEOC did not have sufficient factual basis for including in the class; those who did not formally consent to class membership; and those who do not meet the standard of severe and pervasive harassment required in a pattern or practice case, as defined by Judge Joan Gottschall in EEOC v. International Profit Associates, Inc., 2007 WL 3120069 (N.D. Ill., 10-23-07)("IPA II").[1]

CRST's speculation that EEOC's selection of class members was based on insufficient evidence is simply

1. CRST relies on the IPA case, EEOC v. International Profit Associates, Inc., N. D. Ill. #01 C 4427, a pattern or practice sexual harassment case presently being litigated by some of the same EEOC counsel litigating this case, and pending in the Northern District of Illinois. Judge Joan Gottschall has to date issued three written decisions in response to Defendant's Motions for Summary Judgment; the decision relied upon by CRST is the second such decision, and is therefore cited as IPA II. The first decision is found at 2007 WL 844555 (N.D. Ill. 3-16-07) (IPA I); the third ("IPA III"), dated July 14, 2008, is attached as Exhibit 1.

false. Each class member named by the EEOC in its Initial Disclosures and First through Tenth Supplements thereto has provided credible evidence of sexual harassment, either to the EEOC directly, or to CRST. The exception, discussed below, are 56 women, listed in EEOC's Eleventh Supplement to Initial Disclosures, who responded to EEOC's correspondence prior to the October 15 deadline, but whom EEOC was unable to make contact with prior to October 15.

The remaining two arguments are related to the issues which EEOC desired to raise with the Court, when it filed its Motion for a Rule 16 Pretrial Conference, and are discussed in Section III, below.

I. Background

This is a pattern or practice case in which EEOC alleges that CRST subjected its female truck drivers to a hostile work environment based on sex. CRST is a national over the road trucking firm, whose business model relies on drivers working in pairs in order to deliver freight more quickly than its competitors. CRST recruits thousands of new drivers, many of whom have no previous truck driving experience. For many, it pays for the applicant to attend school to obtain a commercial driver's license, in return for a commitment to work for CRST for a period of six to eight months. Following successful completion of the schooling, new drivers are placed with lead drivers for a period of 28 days, during which the lead driver trains the student, and has complete authority over the way the driving is conducted and whether the student successfully completes the training period. Following completion of training, drivers are paired on trucks, often with complete strangers.

While driving together the paired drivers are alone with each other, first for the 28 days, and later as they transport loads of freight across the country. They share a tiny berth behind the seats of the truck, which includes a bunk bed, and room for small items such as a television and a microwave. They generally take turns sleeping while the other drives, and leave the truck only to obtain fuel or food, or for bathroom and shower breaks. The potential for sexual harassment is obvious.

While CRST has written policies prohibiting sexual harassment, its actual policies, challenged in this lawsuit, are completely insufficient to prevent harassment, to protect victims while the harassment is occurring, to discipline harassers, or to prevent known harassers from repeating their conduct. Women who advise their dispatcher that they are being harassed are routinely told to stay on the truck rather than interrupt their training or delay delivery of the load. When they are permitted to leave the truck, they are often told to wait until they reach a CRST terminal, or, if they insist on leaving immediately, are often not provided with adequate money or transportation to reach safety. When formal complaints are made, victims are routinely told that CRST is unable to determine whether the allegations are well founded, because there were no witnesses on the truck. If a woman leaves CRST because of harassment, she faces being sued for the price of her schooling. In the approximately 146 sexual harassment investigation files produced to EEOC for the period from 2005-2008, virtually none resulted in the termination of the harasser. Occasionally, the Human Resources department advises the Safety department that a harasser should not be permitted to train or drive with women for a period of six months. Despite the 146 documented complaints of harassment, and numerous other complaints which did not result in an investigation, CRST witnesses have stated that the company does not have a sexual harassment problem.

But it does. EEOC has identified 268 women who were harassed, and certainly there is no reason to think that these are all. The harassment ranges from forcing women who are alone with a harasser on a truck to watch pornography and to witness nudity and masturbation; to subjecting them to propositions for sex, often coupled with threats to trainees that they will not pass the training if they refuse; to physical groping and sexual assaults, often while driving at high speeds, and to rape.

II. The Class

a. "Class Members" in EEOC Pattern or Practice Cases

The term "class" is something of a misnomer when used in a pattern or practice case brought by the EEOC. See, EEOC v. International Profit Associates, Inc., 2007 WL 844555, *1-2, n. 2 (N.D. Ill. 2007)("IPA I"), citing EEOC v. Mitsubishi Motor Manufacturing Co., 990 F. Supp. 1059, 1076, n. 10 (C.D. Ill. 1998) and EEOC v. Dial

Corp., 156 F. Supp. 2d 926, 946, n. 12 (N.D. Ill. 2001). The term is normally used in the context of actions brought pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. That Rule does not apply to pattern or practice actions brought by the EEOC. Gen. Tel. Co. of the N. W., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 324 (1980).

In a class action brought by a private party pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3), the plaintiff is required to meet certain criteria for defining the class. Rule 23(a). There is no such requirement for an EEOC pattern or practice case. Here EEOC pled generally that CRST discriminated against "female employees of CRST [who] were [...] subjected to sexual harassment and a sexually hostile and offensive work environment while working for CRST, including among other things, unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments from their lead drivers or team drivers." First Amended Complaint, ¶ 8. In practice, EEOC has included "class members" in this action who are females employed by CRST as truck drivers, and were harassed by drivers with whom they were assigned. EEOC has not included women employed by CRST in other capacities, nor female truck drivers who claim harassment by management personnel or by customers.

The second major distinction between a class action brought pursuant to Rule 23(b)(3) and the instant case is that under Rule 23(b)(3), the court may direct appropriate notice to the class which will advise the class member of her right to opt out of the class, and that she will be bound by the results of the action. There is no obligation for a class member to "opt in" to the class; they are included even if they have no actual knowledge of the case, so long as they do not opt out. In a pattern or practice case there are no formal requirements for notice to the "class," and individuals who do not sign a release in return for monetary relief are not bound by the judgment. As discussed below, as in a Rule 23(b)(3) action, there is also no requirement that victims "opt in" in order to obtain relief.

Here the Court ordered EEOC to identify "class members" by October 15, 2008. EEOC does not understand this to mean that EEOC must identify all women who meet the criteria used by it in determining class membership, which it obviously could not do, since many may never be known. Rather EEOC has understood the Order to require that EEOC identify all persons for whom it intends to seek relief, and it has done so.

b. EEOC's Efforts to Identify "Class Members"

EEOC has identified 268[2] female truck drivers who were sexually harassed by trainers or co-drivers. The handful of women who have advised EEOC that they do not wish to be included in the class have not been included.

---

2. As noted by CRST, the list of class members included thirteen duplicates and one male. CRST correctly surmises that these errors were the result of haste; they also resulted from the need to compare results from three different sources of information provided by CRST, and the movement of individuals from lists of persons to be contacted to lists of those actually contacted.

Appendix Z

CRST is correct that EEOC after the litigation began and discovery commenced, identified class members from three primary sources. The first group were women who responded to letters sent by EEOC in April, 2008, using language negotiated with CRST, to women drivers who had driven with males from January 1, 2005 through September, 2007. CRST had previously sent letters to these women, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit 2. The second group were women who were sent letters by EEOC on September 23, 2008, following CRST's production of updated data showing driver pairs on September 15, 2008. The third group were women identified from the approximately 146 investigative files maintained by CRST's human resources department and produced by CRST on October 1, 2008.[3]

CRST is also correct that EEOC opposed the October 15 deadline for disclosure of class members, arguing that it would be overly burdensome. At that time EEOC had sent letters to the first group, but had not yet contacted a large proportion of the women who had responded. Following receipt of the Order, EEOC directed massively increased resources to the case, and by October 15 had spoken with, and identified, a total of 132 victims of sexual harassment. Other than those class members identified in its Seventh, Ninth and Eleventh Supplemental Rule 26(a) disclosures, EEOC had spoken with every class member

3. EEOC also identified some class members from charges filed with EEOC or state fair employment agencies, including eight charges filed since this action was brought, four of them in 2008. Including these charging parties as class members avoids the possibility of duplicate litigation.

prior to October 15. CRST's argument that class members should be stricken because EEOC was able to increase its pace of disclosure, as required by the Court, is ludicrous.

On August 15, 2006, following receipt of CRST's motion to set a deadline for identifying class members, EEOC served discovery requests on CRST asking for information concerning the second and third groups of class members: an update of the driver pair list, and investigative files which CRST might possess. When the October 15 deadline was established, EEOC requested that CRST provide the information as quickly as possible so that the deadline could be met. CRST produced the updated driver pair list on September 15 and the investigative files on October 1.

It is particularly inappropriate for CRST to argue that the disclosures based on information received from CRST on September 15 and October 1 were untimely, when both the updated driver pair list and the investigative files should have been produced, pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1), far earlier than they actually were. Initial disclosures, served on February 27, 2008, included "documents relating to female and male driver team pairings since January 1, 2005." Exhibit 3. CRST did not update the list as required by the Rule until September 15, thirty days after requested by EEOC. Equally egregiously, CRST's Rule 26(a)(1) disclosures did not even mention the investigative files. CRST's Amended Answer and Affirmative Defenses includes as its first affirmative defense: "CRST took reasonable care to prevent and correct unlawful harassment..." It was not until November 10, 2008, after the filing of the instant Motion, that CRST submitted a "Second Supplement to rule 26(a)(1) Initial Disclosures," which for the first time mentioned documents relating to, inter alia, "any complaints, any investigations by CRST into their complaints, and any corrective action taken..." p. 19, ¶ B.4. Exhibit 4. The files were not produced on February 27; they were not produced when explicitly requested on August 15; they were not produced on September 15, thirty days after the formal request; EEOC did not receive them until October 1, two weeks before the deadline.

As noted by CRST, the short time frames forced EEOC to request potential class members to respond within three days of receipt of EEOC's letter. While many did so, many calls came too late for EEOC to have personal contact with the potential class members prior to October 15. Based on the fact that they, and some from the earlier mailing, had responded to EEOC's letter, EEOC has a good faith belief that they were likely victims of sexual harassment, and therefore identified the 56 women who had contacted EEOC by mail or telephone, but EEOC had not been able to reach. It should be noted that many of the class members are still truck drivers and are away from home for substantial periods of time.

The third group of class members were identified through CRST's internal investigative files.[4] EEOC had not, by October 15, been able to reach those women named in its Seventh and Ninth Supplemental disclosures, but instead based the class designation on the evidence contained in the investigative files.

4. Contrary to CRST's implication, not all of the women whose complaints were investigated internally by CRST were named as class members by EEOC.

Since October 15, EEOC has been in contacted by twelve of the women listed in its Seventh and Ninth Supplements. For example, Victoria High was identified in the Ninth Supplement, based on a complaint she made to CRST. According to the one page investigative file:

> She said that on May 3 [2005] during the night, her and Ronald Itson got on a truck together. That night, he took out two dildos and told her if she could go down on them, he'd give her $100... He asked her if he could suck her toes.... When she was driving the next day, he told her to look back into the sleeper berth. She saw that he was watching pornographic videos. He told her not to call him for any reason because he was concentrating in the back. She said the entire time she was driving, he was "getting off." He called her at the hotel yesterday to ask her why she had gotten off the truck... She was scared to go in the back because she did not want him to attack her.

Exhibit 5. Ms. High did not receive the initial letter sent by EEOC, but did receive the letter sent to women who had made sex harassment complaints, after those complaints were received on October 1. She called EEOC on October 22; the call was returned on November 7. She is currently scheduled for deposition on November 14 at 9:00 a.m.

Appendix Z

EEOC has, as of October 15, 2008, identified the individuals for whom it seeks relief. It has a good faith basis, as set forth above, for believing that each individual named is a victim of the pattern or practice of sex harassment alleged in the complaint, or that they desire to discuss their situation with EEOC.

III. No "Class Members" Should be Stricken

In its Motion, CRST seeks to strike class members "who have not agreed that the EEOC may assert claims on their behalf" and women who "do not have valid stand-alone claims." Def. Motion, p. 2. Neither argument has merit.

A. There is No Requirement that EEOC Obtain Consent of "Class" Members

By its Motion, CRST attempts to impose an additional requirement for class membership: that the victim of sex harassment formally opt in to the class. As discussed above, such a requirement would, of course, be far more onerous than the requirements for class members under Rule 23(b)(3), who are included in the class with or without their knowledge unless they formally opt out. CRST cites no authority for such a requirement, and, indeed, the authority is to the contrary. See, EEOC v. Johnson & Higgins, Inc., 91 F.3d 1529, 1536-37 (2nd Cir. 1996)(In ADEA case, EEOC is authorized "to bring suit on behalf of individuals who do not believe themselves to be victims of discrimination and who seem to have not interest in pursing a suit against their employer.") See also, EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 534 U.S. 279, 291 (2002), which accepted EEOC's "position that it may pursue a claim on the employee's behalf even after the employee has disavowed any desire to seek relief [Citation omitted], the statute clearly makes the EEOC the master of its own case..."

In response to the Court's Order requiring identification of "class members" by October 15, EEOC identified all women whom it had then discovered who meet its definition for the class for whom it seeks relief. EEOC respectfully submits that as "master of its case," it has sole discretion to determine the group of persons for whom to seek relief. Of course, it acknowledges the Court's right to set the deadline for identifying those persons for discovery purposes, and CRST's right to challenge, at the appropriate time, the substantive merits of each claim. EEOC also acknowledges CRST's right to seek discovery, at the appropriate time, concerning each class member, and to seek relief if EEOC is unable to provide the class member for deposition. In this case, EEOC has not identified the very few women who have advised it that they do not wish to be included. It has had (by October 15) personal contact with 132 of the identified class members, each of whom has provided credible evidence that she meets the criteria for class membership. EEOC does intend to seek relief for "class members" whom it has spoken to since October 15 and those whom it has thus far been unable to speak with personally, but who have made credible complaints included in CRST's investigative files, or who have communicated to EEOC that they believe they are victims of harassment.[5]

5. EEOC has been contacted since October 15 by approximately ten women making late responses to the two mass

B. The Appropriate Standard of Proof of Individual Harassment

CRST also asks the Court to order EEOC to strike all identified class members who were not subject to conduct which was "severe or pervasive enough to render the plaintiff's work environment both objectively and subjectively hostile." Def. Mem., p. 10. The short answer is that EEOC expects to prove that every identified class member met that standard.

EEOC submits, however, that this is not the appropriate time to resolve what are, in effect, motions for summary judgment against individual claims. As discussed below, EEOC believes that individual claims should be considered after trial of the pattern or practice claim in Phase I of this case – the reason that EEOC filed its Motion for a Rule 16 Pretrial Conference. The proper standard for evaluating individual claims of harassment has not been resolved. Judge Gottschall, in requiring proof of severe and egregious harassment for each claimant, notes her disagreement with three other district courts which have considered the issue. IPA II, * 5-8. See, Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp 1076-77; Dial, 156 F. Supp. 2d 946-958; Jenson v. Eveleth Taconite Co., 824 F. Supp. 847 (D. Minn. 1993). Judge Gottschall has further explained in IPA III, Exhibit 3, p. 5, "The court's October 23rd order establishes that each claimant bears the mailings, who have not been identified. Following review of the individual circumstances, EEOC intends to move the Court to modify its Order to permit inclusion of some of these individuals for "good cause."

burden of individually establishing that she was subject to sexual harassment under both the objective and subjective standards recited above. However, that does not mean that the court, when examining the nature and severity of the harassment claims of each claimant in Phase II, must turn a blind eye to the findings of Phase I concerning the existence of pervasive and severe hostile environment."

As discussed below, EEOC has a proposal for the timing of addressing the substantive legal issues posed by this case. However, EEOC submits that every identified class member, subject to possible amendment for those not yet re-contacted, will meet the standard for objective and subjective harassment as defined by Judge Gottschall in IPA. Every woman identified was subjected to unwelcome verbal and physical conduct of a sexual nature in an atmosphere which was, by its nature, threatening and intimidating. The harassment occurred on a truck, where the victim was isolated with the harasser in a tiny place, hundreds or thousands of miles for home, family and friends; with no way of escaping without the consent of the harasser. It is highly unlikely that the harassment would ever fail to meet the most stringent standard of severity.

C. Communications with "Class Members"

CRST's third request in its Motion is that EEOC withdraw its instruction that CRST not communicate with class members about the allegations of the complaint. It has not disputed that EEOC has a quasi attorney client relationship with those class members (the 132) who have requested EEOC representation, but it argues that it should be permitted to contact "class members" who could provide evidence supporting CRST's defenses. EEOC requests that the Court order that CRST not communicate about the subject matter of individual complaints of sex harassment, beyond what has already been agreed to by the parties.

EEOC does not claim an attorney client relationship with women with whom it has not spoken. Rather, the issue is the extent to which a party may seek helpful evidence from an unrepresented adverse party in the context of a pattern or practice case (or Rule 23(b)(3) class action.) The leading case on the issue is Gulf Oil Co. v. Bernard, 452 U.S. 89 (1981) in which the Court recognized both First Amendment rights for litigants to communicate with potential class members, and the district court's authority under Rule 23 to monitor such communications. See also, EEOC v. Mitsubishi, 102 F.3d 869 (1996) which, in dicta, discussed the issue in the context of a pattern or practice sexual harassment suit. Following that decision, the district court again addressed the issue of "whether and in what manner Mitsubishi may interview its employees about alleged claims of sex harassment." EEOC v. Mitsubishi Motor Manufacturing, 960 F. Supp. 164, 167 (C.D. Ill. 1997). In that case the Defendant had agreed to conduct "mini-depositions" concerning allegations of past harassment, and the court "now makes it explicit: any future attempt by Mitsubishi to hold discussions with the alleged victims in this case concerning past incidents of harassment must be done by a noticed deposition in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure." Id., at 168.

Appendix Z

In this case, the parties have, until now, followed the procedures utilized in Mitsubishi. CRST sent, in February, 2008, a letter to all female drivers, advising them of the lawsuit. Exhibit 2. Following EEOC's receipt of the data concerning driver pairs, it drafted a letter to female drivers, and negotiated modifications with CRST. See CRST. Exhibit 1. Similarly, the second letter to drivers for whom EEOC had no individualized complaints of sex harassment was discussed with CRST. See, CRST Exhibit 2. EEOC understands that some women have, in fact, contacted CRST in response to the two letters.

Now at issue is CRST's desire to discuss particular instances of sex harassment with women who have been identified by EEOC. The parties have not discussed the issue beyond the e-mail correspondence attached to CRST's Memorandum as Exhibit 8 and 10. As in Mitsubishi, EEOC submits that communications between CRST and class members with specific claims of harassment should be through properly noticed depositions.

IV. Discovery and Trial

On October 30, 2008, the Court granted EEOC's unopposed Motion for Rule 16 Pretrial Conference, and set the Conference for November 12, 2008 at 1:00 p.m. The parties have been unable to agree to a joint proposal for dealing with discovery and trial, as requested by the Court. Defendant CRST's pending motion, filed on November 6, 2008, implicates a number of issues which are relevant to the discovery and trial issues to be discussed on November 12. EEOC respectfully submits the following proposals.

Appendix Z

A. Trial - Bifurcation

A number of courts have approved the pattern or practice model for sex harassment cases, and have uniformly determined that in pattern or practice sexual harassment cases, the proof of the pattern or practice and the proof of individual entitlement to relief should be bifurcated. See, Mitsubishi, 990 F. Supp. 1059, 1073 (C.D. Ill. 1998); Dial Corporation, 156 F. Supp. 2d 926, 946-47 (N.D. Ill. 2001); IPA II, 2007 WL 3120069 * 11 (N.D. Ill. 2007) ("While the court rejects the EEOC's proposed method of proof, the court does agree with the EEOC that bifurcation is necessary in this case. Not only did the Supreme Court endorse a bifurcated approach to pattern or practice cases in Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 361, bifurcation is proper here because the court will require a jury finding on the pattern or practice aspect of the case before the jury considers the individual claims so that the court can determine whether to shift the burden of production on the negligence element of the individual claimants' cases to [Defendant.]")

The bifurcated trial model presents issues of how to complete discovery of individual claims and of how to schedule dispostive motions, including those which relate to management of the trial. The size of the class is obviously relevant to those issues.

EEOC believes that the trial should be bifurcated. In the first Phase, the jury would determine whether EEOC had proven a pattern or practice of sexual harassment. During this phase EEOC would expect to call 20-25 class members, and anticipates that the plaintiff's case, including evidence from the plaintiff-interveners, would last approximately two weeks. If the jury found for EEOC, EEOC would be entitled to injunctive relief. The jury would then be asked to determine whether, and how much, punitive damages to award. Compare, Dial, 259 F. Supp. 2d 710 (N.D. Ill. 2003) with IPA II, 2007 WL 3120069 * 11. The trial would then move to a second phase in which a jury (the same, or a new one, or multiple juries) would determine damages for each class member with appropriate presumptions derived from the pattern or practice finding. Individual trials or hearings would be brief, since issues of notice and negligence would have been resolved on a class wide basis. If the jury were to find against EEOC on the pattern or practice claim, the trial would move to Phase II, with trial of each class member's claim treated as an individual case.

CRST has not expressed a position with respect to bifurcation.[6] Presumably, a single trial would require the parties to present evidence with respect to each class member of the harassment, of complaints made by the victims, of CRST's response, of lost wages and of emotional distress. In its initial disclosures, CRST identified 17 witnesses with purported knowledge of the claims of

6. It did not respond to EEOC's suggestion of August 20, 2008, attached to its Memorandum as Exhibit 9, that the parties agree to bifurcation of trial and discovery, and that, in return, EEOC would not seek relief following an adverse Phase I finding, for class members not offered for deposition. That offer was not accepted, and EEOC would not now expect to drop any individual claim, regardless of a Phase I verdict.

sexual harassment by the named Charging Party, Monica Stark. Its Second Supplement to those disclosures, served on November 10, 2008, includes names of 105 witnesses with knowledge relating to the 39 class members who have been deposed.[7] The jury would then presumably be instructed to disregard large parts of the evidence if it were to find that CRST knew or should have known of the hostile environment, and failed to take adequate steps to remedy it. It is difficult to conceive of how long such a trial would take.

B. Dispositive Motions

EEOC submits that motions arguing the legal issues related to pattern or practice sexual harassment cases (including, but not limited to, motions for summary judgment) should be filed following the close of discovery. At that time the parties could make any arguments for summary judgment, for the appropriate standard for proving the objective element of individual sex harassment claims, for the appropriate presumptions to result from a pattern or practice finding, and for how and when punitive damages should be determined. EEOC submits that with respect to dispositive motions regarding individual class member claims, and assuming that the Court does not grant summary judgment against EEOC on its pattern or practice claim, such motions should be deferred until the completion of the Phase I trial, when the jury's decision will have established the appropriate burdens of proof and presumptions for each individual claim.[8]

7. Unlike CRST, EEOC has not attached certain pages of the disclosures, because they contain addresses of the witnesses, protected by the Protective Order, entered on April 7, 2008, and they are not material to the argument.

C. Discovery

To date, CRST has taken depositions of 39 class members, in Chicago and in Cedar Rapids, proffered at the rate of 4-6 per week since October 1, 2008. Class members have been selected for deposition based on their availability and willingness to travel from their homes, located throughout the country, mostly to Chicago. The substance of their claims has not been a factor in their selection for deposition. Twelve additional class members have been scheduled for depositions in Detroit for November 13 and 14.

EEOC proposes that it be permitted to designate for deposition all additional class members whom it is considering calling for trial of the pattern or practice claim, likely no more than twenty-five. Any class member who had not been deposed would not testify at Phase I of the trial. Following the jury's verdict on the pattern or practice claim, additional discovery of the remaining class members can be conducted, limited to issues which had not been resolved in the first phase of the trial.

8. In IPA, the case cited by CRST, the court has allowed motions for summary judgment on individual claims prior to the Phase I trial, dealing primarily with the issue of whether the harassment was severe and egregious. To date, some 46 motions individual motions have been briefed; motions pertaining to the remaining 54 class members are due to be filed by January 15, 2009. No trial date has yet been set for this case filed in 2001.

Appendix Z

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, EEOC respectfully requests that the Court deny CRST's Motion for Order to Show Cause. EEOC looks forward to meeting with the Court to clarify the procedures for discovery and trial.

APPENDIX AA — EXCERPTS FROM DEPOSITION OF GLORIA SOUTH, TAKEN OCTOBER 23, 2008

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

Case No. 1:07 CV-95

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT
OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

VS.

CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC.,

Defendant.

The videotaped deposition of GLORIA SOUTH, called for examination, taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States District Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions, taken before CARI BILLS, CSR No. 084-003836, a Notary Public within and for the County of Cook, State of Illinois, and a Certified Shorthand Reporter of said state, at the law offices of Jenner & Block, Suite 4000, 330 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, on the 23rd day of October, A.D. 2008.

[46]Q. When you had the first discussion with Mr. Garant about him saying he — he was not looking for sexual relationship was that before you got on the truck with him?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any concerns about getting on at all?

A. Well, after he told me that, I didn't think I had anything to worry about.

He said, I got a fiancé. I don't need no sexual favors. And I said, Good. I don't [47]neither. I said, We're on agreement with that.

I got on the truck with him. He started telling me that I couldn't double clutch, you know. I had to drive it the way he wanted me to drive and all of that and sex was the last thing on my mind.

Q. And so what — anything other than that happened on the trip from Carlisle to New York?

A. No, not that I recall.

Q. There weren't any sex-based claims or sex-based comments made?

A. No, not at that time, no, not that I remember.

Q. You mentioned, I think, right before we were taking our break that you're remembering some other things that you didn't put in the written statement you sent to Mr. Barnes.

A. Correct.

Q. What did you remember that isn't in the written statement that you gave to Mr. Barnes?

A. When I got off the truck to get my meds for my son in Hickory, North Carolina, I met him in a Waffle House. I remembered that he told me that I had ten minutes to get off the truck and get my medicine and get back on there.

[48]Well, at that point in time I was planning on just getting my stuff and getting off the truck. After what — after some of the sexual stuff that had happened. And he had a box, like a shoebox that he laid up on the dash. And I said, What's that? And he said — and he popped it open real quick and closed it real click. Well, I only got a glance of a gun.

And he told me — he said, If you don't get back on this truck — he said, I'll kill you and your son. And he told me if I did not get back on that truck he would come out and kill me.

Q. And have you recalled any other things outside of that incident?

A. Yes. He sexually assaulted me — I don't know how to put it. Several times I would be climbing up in the truck. One time he woke me up. It was my time to drive. And I was — had sat up and was putting my shoes and socks on and I heard him open the curtains because I was looking down tying my shoes. And when I looked up, he stood there with his penis out of his pants and right in the face.

Q. Did that happen on more than one [49]occasion?

A. Yes.

Q. How many times?

A. It was four times total that I recall.

Q. Four times total in the way that you have just described or all together?

A. The way I just described.

Q. And you included at least in one of those in the statement that you wrote?

A. Yes.

Q. And how is it that you now recall the other three incidents?

A. Just like, you know, you get a blank memory and then all of a sudden it starts — stuff starts coming back to you and it's just been coming back to me different things that happened.

We were in a rest area at one time and he did that.

We was at a truck stop at one time and he did that. And, I mean, it just happened at different times.

It was on the side of the road one time. He had stopped to urinate beside the wheel of the truck. And when he come back on the truck, it had [50]woke me up because we had stopped.

And I asked him what he was doing. And he said, I just had to get out of the truck for a minute. And he said, I'm going to rest my eyes for a minute. And then the next thing I knew he had the curtain ripped open and there we were again.

Q. When is it that — how is it that you have been recalling these instances that you didn't have as part of your notes?

A. I don't know how I'm recalling them. I just know that it happened, and I tried to forget. I tried to forget all of this for a year, a year and a half. And, you know, it's something you can't forget.

What I went through, I'll never forget it. And it will always be in the back of my mind. And any time I'm put in that position, any time I'm around a bunch of men, that's what I think of. That's what comes back to me.

* * *

[58]Q. Okay. And then August 27, tell me what [59] happened on that day, if you can?

A. I'm going to have to look over this because I don't recall it exactly.

Okay. This is — after we left Carlisle, we delivered that load. We were early and we had to lay over the night because we got there on a Sunday. And we had dropped the trailer and bobtailed out to the store. And I went in and got my stuff and he got his stuff. I used the restroom and all that.

I came back out and got in the truck. I was in the truck before he was. And that's when he crawled up in the truck — and he was driving at this point and — because I had never bobtailed. It's different driving bobtail than with a trailer and I had never done bobtailing.

So he jumped up in the seat and cranked up and that's when he threw a box of condoms in my lap. And I — I made a joke out of it. I thought he was joking. I picked them up out of my lap, held them up and said, And what are we going to do with these? I'm allergic to latex. I can't use these. And I just threw them up on the dash.

And he said, You'll do what I tell you [60]to do on this truck.

And I'm like uhn-uhn.

And he said, Oh, yeah. You will do exactly what I tell you to do on this truck.

So I just blew it off. I just said this ain't going to happen.

* * *

[62]Q. So you had arrived at your destination in Ohio early on the 27th or 28th?

A. Yes.

Q. And that's — that's where this incident occurs where he throws the box of condoms on your lap?

A. Yes.

[63]Q. And you make light of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Then what happens?

A. We get back over to the shipper and I, you know, I was on the top bunk asleep. And he was on the phone. He stayed on the phone 24/7 with his girlfriend unless it was taking a shower or using the bathroom or something like that. Most of the time he was on the phone with his girlfriend. That's all I heard was chirping and, Hey, baby, and, da, da, da and just bull crap talk.

And — but I had crawled on the top bunk after we got back over there and went to sleep. And after he did the condoms, I kind of took it as a threat but I kind of blew it off like it didn't bother me, you know, because I didn't want him to feel he had power over me at this point.

Q. Had you had experiences with men like that previously?

A. No.

He — I was on the top bunk sleeping and he told me to wake up and we would play.

And I said, No, we're not going to play. You know, it's not going to happen. I'm telling [64]you, no, I do not want to do it.

But it got to the point where he's, like, I told you this is my truck and you're going to do what I say.

Q. And so what did you then do?

A. Well, I come off the top bunk. That's when I saw him laying there naked.

MR. VISSER: Okay. Hold on just a second. Let him change his tape.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: This is the end of tape No. 1. We're going off the record at 11:03.

(WHEREUPON, a break was taken.)

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: This is the beginning of tape No. 2. We're back on the record at 11:05.

BY MR. VISSER:

Q. Ms. South, before we changed the tapes, you indicated that you were there at the shipper's place stopped. You were on the top bunk. Mr. Garant awoke you.

Continue describing what occurred then.

A. Well, he told me to wake up and come on down. I'm going to play.

And I said, No, I'm not going to play. I'm not going to do what you want me to do.

[65]And, you know, his voice changed. His attitude changed and that's when I was scared.

I didn't know what he was going to do, you know. I just, like, okay, and, well — so I finally got off the top bunk. I got down and he as laying there naked. And he got a condom out.

And I said, We're not doing this.

And he said, Yes, we are. You're going to do what I say.

So he forced me to have sex with him. He kind of grabbed me and pulled me down on the bunk. And I resisted as long as I could and then finally it happened.

So after that, I just — he said — you know, I was burning. I was itching. I was hurting from the condom because I'm allergic to latex. And I told him it was hurting and burning. And he said, Oh, well, deal with it.

So he was like trying to be macho man to make sure I was satisfied. So I faked an orgasm to get him off of me and that's — that's the way it ended, you know. And I just got up and I had some baby wipes. I cleaned up, and I got back on the top bunk and I laid up there and I cried all night.

[66] Q. Any idea how long this whole — this first episode occurred?

A. I don't know how long. I don't know.

Q. And so when you — when you were resisting in what way did you resist?

A. Well, I kept trying to push him away and just resentment type. You know, didn't want him to touch me. Kept pushing his hands off of me. Finally, that's when he crawled on top and I thought I can't do anything now because he was a lot stronger than I was.

So instead of maybe getting beat up or — or choked to death or whatever I just gave in.

Q. Had you ever been beaten or choked by a man before that?

A. Yeah, but not during a sexual relationship.

Q. In what kind of an environment did previous assaults occur on you?

A. It was my third husband.

Q. Okay. Domestic violence?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you respond to that incident, [67]the domestic violence with your third husband?

A. I just moved out, moved on in my life. Let it go.

Q. Did you know how to operate the QuelComm?

A. I did through the orientation, but he would not let me touch the QuelComm on the truck.

Q. Did you have a phone with you?

A. I did but it was dead, and I was trying to get a phone charger. Every time we stopped at Walmart or K-Mart or whatever, I tried to get a phone charger. But every time we did — I was in there trying to get that.

See, he was aside me the whole time after that first incident. He was no more than an arms length away from me. If I stopped to use the bathroom, he was standing outside the bathroom door from the time I went in until the time I came out. So I was never away from him more than an arms length.

And if we'd go to Walmart, I would be looking for a phone charger or whatever. He would say, Oh, come on. We need to get groceries. We need to get back on the truck. We're wasting time. [68]And so I'd get the groceries and we would go on.

And he would say, You could use my phone any time you want to. And that was a decoy for me not to buy another phone or have a phone.

So he said, I'm about out of minutes. I don't get paid until such a such a day. Could you get a phone card because you can use my phone any time you want to. Any time. And so I borrowed him the phone card which he reimbursed me on that and the groceries that time.

And I asked to use his phone. Well, this is important, you know, with me on the walkie-talkie. He'd be on the phone, And I would ask him again. And he'd say, You're going to have to wait until after 9:00 when it's cheaper. And every time I asked to use it, it was different. It was a different excuse every time. So I never got to use his phone.

So the last I think about two or three days before I got off the truck I finally got a boost phone but a lot of places it wouldn't pick up so I had no signal.

Q. Going back to this initial — the initial trip there from Ohio to Denver, then.

[69]August 28th through the 30th of 2006, did you — when you stopped at truck stops, did you attempt to go to a pay phone?

Appendix AA

A. The only attempt I had made to get help is one time we were at a — we was going to stop at a truck stop and get something to eat. And, you know, buy some drinks and stuff. And I had some bills and I took a sticky note and I put down the trailer number, the truck number, his name, my name, the company name, where we were headed. And I said. "Call 911" is what I had put on my sticky note.

And when I handed the lady the money and she saw it, she's like — I said, Just call 911 — call. I said, Just call and give them that information. And he grabbed me by the arm and pulled me out the door. I didn't even get my change back from what I bought. That's the only time I could — I had the chance to get help and tell them what was going on.

Q. And when do you think that — when do you think that occurred? Was that right after the first incident?

A. No. It was like the second or third [70]incident.

Q. What about the other — you had no opportunity to simply walk over to the phone and call 911?

A. No. He was — like I said, he was right beside me. He was within an arms length of me from the very first time I went until I got off the truck. The only time — even I would act like I was going to go in and take a shower. I would open the door, you know, he — he was standing there. I would go in a bathroom, and I'd wait for a few minutes. And then open the door and he'd be standing there.

Q. You got on the truck with him on the 25th. And just looking at your notes, as of the 29th you still had not — you still hadn't taken a shower?

A. No. I had two showers in 17 days.

Q. You were requesting this of him?

A. Yes, every day.

Q. And what was his response?

A. We don't have time. We don't have time. We don't have time to stop. We will take one on the next fuel break, fuel stop.

[71]Q. On the 29th it says that you did have a bathroom stop to change drivers and you had another sexual encounter with Mr. Garant.

A. Yes.

Q. And describe how the second encounter came about. You think it was the next day. That's what your notes suggest.

A. I'm thinking it was — it's been so long ago. I mean, I remember things, but I can't remember the exact dates and, you know, what day it happened and stuff.

He — this is the time where we went in the bathroom and I came back out and he was standing — you know, I peaked around and he was standing outside.

And then I went back in and used the bathroom and I freshened up, you know, with a wash cloth and a towel and stuff like that. I came back out and I didn't see him sitting in the truck. So I put my stuff in the truck and when I started to get back out, I heard him. And I was sitting there and I was waiting on him. And I thought — because I had my window down. I was smoking. And I thought, what did he say. And I was looking [72]around.

Anyway, he wasn't in the truck. And I thought he was still in the bathroom. So when I ripped open the curtains to go back there and lay down because it was his turn to drive, he was laying there naked there again and that's when the second — second attack happened.

Q. So what happened after you pulled the curtains back and he is there naked?

A. He said, You know what you got to do.

And I said, Not again. I said, How many times do I have to do this?

He said, As long as I tell you to.

So instead of fighting with him and resisting with him, I just gave in for my safety because I didn't know what he was capable of doing.

Q. So you had just gotten back — where do you think you were at a truck stop?

A. No, it was a rest area.

Q. At a rest area?

A. Yes.

Q. And he had come back to the truck first.

Had you thought about using the phone at the rest area?

[73]A. Well, I didn't know where he was at and what I did when I first got there, I went in the bathroom and I just stood there for a minute and I come back out because I thought he, you know, was just following me over and making sure I went in the bathroom and he went in the bathroom.

But when I turned around and came back out like a couple minutes later, he was standing there. So I just went on in, used the bathroom, freshened up, come back out. Act like everything was okay. Because I didn't know where he was at. I didn't know if he was hiding behind a bush or what. I didn't see him at that point.

So I went on up to the truck to make sure he wasn't in the truck. And when I started to get back out to use the phone is when he hollered. And I thought he was outside and I looked around outside and I thought, shoot, he's watching me — you know, he's keeping an eye on me.

And when I ripped open the curtain, he said, You know, what you —

I said, How many times do we have to do this?

He said, You know what you got to do.

[74]And I started to get back off the truck. He grabbed my arm, pulled me to him and it happened. And that's the way it happened the other three times. He would grab my arm and pull me to him.

One occasion I had done laundry. And he had went over to the restaurant — told me he was going to get a coffee or something and I was with the clothes. And I started to step outside because there was phones right on the other side of the wall. And I started out the — out the — out the laundry thing to use the phone and he was standing there.

Q. An incident occurred where you took out a stop sign with a truck?

A. Yes.

Q. How did that come about?

A. Okay. I was on the ramp and he was over in the driver's — in the passenger's seat and he was sitting there like this texting on the phone. And I was sitting at the stop sign.

And I said, Dude, you need to move because I can't see my mirror. And he looked up at the mirror and he said, Just go.

[75] And I said, I can't see my mirror, move. He said, Just go.

So when I pulled out, I didn't swing out wide enough and I took out the stop sign. And I drove over to the truck stop and that's when the other driver came back there and told him that I had took out a stop sign.

So he wrote up — he got on the QuelComm and wrote up a report that I took out a stop sign. He didn't tell them why I took it out. I couldn't see my mirror. And so I didn't even get out of the truck then. He fueled and we got back on the road and I didn't have a chance to go to the bathroom or anything at that time.

After the stop sign incident, after he called it in and told them that I had took out the stop sign, then every time after that point if we stopped to fuel, if we stopped to eat, if we stopped for anything, I had to do the pretrip inspection. I had to fuel the truck. I had to keep the inside of the truck clean and the windows outside clean. The lights — you know, anything that needed to be done to that truck after that point, I had to do it. I had to do it by myself.

[76]I was like his slave after that incident happened. He wouldn't help me fuel. He wouldn't help me pretrip. He wouldn't help me do nothing.

Q. You believed that the first sexual interaction occurred prior to the stop sign?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that the rest stop sexual interaction happened also before the stop sign or afterwards?

A. I don't remember. If it was before or after. I know the first time it was before.

Q. So by the first — in the first four or five days, did you have any contact with any other employee of CRST?

A. No.

Q. During the entire time on the truck with Mr. Garant, did you have any communication with any other employee of CRST?

A. No.

Q. Was there tension between the two of you related to his training or lack of training of you?

A. Rephrase that.

Q. Did it frustrate you that he was not training you?

[77]A. Yes.

Q. Did you express that frustration to him?

A. Yes, I did. I told him I was on there for a career to learn how to drive, not for the contact that we had had.

Q. How did he respond to that?

A. He just told me it was his truck and I would do what he told me to do.

Q. Did you ever hear — overhear any telephone conversation between Mr. Garant and dispatch at CRST or did he just work through the QuelComms?

A. Most of the time he worked through the QuelComm. He never called them on the phone that I recall. He was on the phone 24/7, so I don't know who he was talking to. Most of the time it was his girlfriend.

Q. So I'm looking at your note that's dated August 31 on your — dated August 31 on Exhibit 232. That's the last date that you include, right?

A. Yes, I believe so because after that I was making my own notes, and I wasn't putting dates on it. I was afraid he would catch me.

[78]Q. Did you tell him that you wanted off of his truck as early as five or six days?

A. Yes, I told him several times I wanted off his truck.

Q. And what was his response?

A. Well, one time he stopped in the middle of nowhere — I mean, I don't even know what state I was in at this time. And I was thinking it was Wyoming because of the desert.

But he just pulled over on the side of the road and told me to get out. And I went back and was getting — like I said, I don't even recall what state. I went back up to pack up my stuff and he hollered back, What the hell are you doing. I said, I'm getting my stuff and I'm getting off your truck.

He said, You can get off the truck but you are not taking your stuff. And I said, Well, it's mine. I'm taking it. And he said, No, you're not.

So he hit the fuel pedal — gas pedal and my head hit the sleeper wall. Well, I'm like dazed for several hours. I don't know how long it was. It was like I was in a state of mind that I [79]didn't know what was going on.

And then I told him several other times, I want off your truck; I want off your truck.

You can get off the truck, but I'm turning you in as abandonment. He said. I'm going to tell them that you abandon the truck. He said, That way you'll never drive another truck.

And I knew enough about the laws and stuff that it would have went on my dec report and I wanted to drive a truck. So I didn't want him turning me in that I abandoned it

Q. And in your notes you tell him you wanted to go to Cedar Rapids since you were in Iowa anyway?

A. Yes.

Q. When you look at the trip log, Exhibit 231, can you tell me when the next time was that you were in Iowa after you — after that trip — after you got to Denver on August 30th. It looks like from Denver you went up to Oregon.

A. Then Oregon to North Carolina.

Q. So from Oregon to North Carolina between August 31st and September 2nd.

So on that — is that the trip that [80]you're — somewhere on that trip you're in Iowa?

A. Yes.

Q. From looking at your notes?

A. Yes.

Q. And he said he wouldn't drive off route?

A. Correct.

Q. But you said he would just take you home?

A. Yes.

Q. And how far is Gastonia from Hickory, North Carolina?

A. About a 30-minute drive.

Q. So you're continuing to have this disagreement as you go across the country through Iowa continuing on to North Carolina?

A. Correct. I told him I didn't want off the truck at home. I wanted to go back to – to Iowa because I wanted a new trainer. I just wanted to get off his truck. I just wanted to be away from him. I just — I wanted another trainer. I just wanted away from him. That was the main problem.

[93]Called Scott Rosekrans the next morning and told him what was going on. That I got off the [94]truck and everything. And I told him — I said, I need to come in and talk to you or somebody.

And he said, About what?

And I said, Sexual harassment. I said, The way I was treated on this truck. I said, He treated me like a slave and just a piece of meat.

And they sent me a taxi and sent me right back over to the terminal. Had to pack everything I had back up and they — I went in and talked to Mr. Barnes, and I talked to Scott and his supervisor and another man. And then I talked to an HR man, which was Mr. Jim Barnes, and they put me on another truck with two guys from Cedar Rapids to North Carolina. I asked for a bus ticket. They wouldn't give it to me. I asked for a plane ticket. They wouldn't give it to me. They put me on a truck with two more men that I really didn't know. It really scared me then because, you know, now I've got two to deal with instead of one and they drove me to North Carolina and dropped me off.

Q. Did any of those two men inappropriately, you know, make any inappropriate statements or advances toward you?

A. No, but I didn't know that when I got on [95]the truck. I had already been with this other dude all of this time and then they put me on another truck with two more guys. I mean, that was – that wasn't right.

Q. Did you — did you tell Mr. Barnes that you wanted to take a few days off and then —

A. Yes.

Q. — be reassigned to a new driver?

A. Yes.

Q. And you're claiming that you asked the company to give you an airplane ticket or a bus ticket to North Carolina from Iowa?

A. Yes.

Q. And instead they said we have got a truck going that way and you rode with two other drivers.

A. Yes.

Q. And after you got — and you told — you gave — you shared your facts with Mr. Barnes and with Scott?

A. And Scott's supervisor.

[113]Q. What was their response, if any, when you were talking about what happened to you?

A. To me, they acted like — to me they were listening but they wasn't listening.

Q. Did they ever ask you what you were planning to do with respect to what happened to you on the truck?

A. No.

Q. Did they tell you what they were going to do themselves with respect to what you had just told them?

A. Said they would be terminating Mark Garant.

Q. And did they ever tell you at any point what happened with Mark Garant? Did you ever find out what, in fact, they did?

A. No. I did not.

Q. Did anyone from CRST ever tell you that they had, in fact, fired him?

A. No, they didn't.

Q. Who was it at this meeting who told you they were going to fire Mark?

[114]A. Mr. Barnes.

APPENDIX BB — EXCERPTS FROM DEPOSITION OF RAMONA VILLAREAL, TAKEN OCTOBER 16, 2008

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

vs.

CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC.,

Defendants.

The deposition of RAMONA VILLAREAL, called for examination, taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure of the United States District Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions, taken before KRISTIN C. BRAJKOVICH, a Certified Shorthand Reporter, CSR. No. 84-3810, of said state, at Suite 4000, 330 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, on the 16th day of October, A.D. 2008, at 9:09 a.m.

[36]Q. Do you believe that you were sexually harassed while you worked for CRST?

A. Yes.

Q. Who do you believe harassed you?

A. John DeJong.

[37]Q. Anyone else?

A. Charles Boone.

Q. Booth?

A. Booth. Thank you.

Q. Anyone else?

A. That was it.

[39]Q. When was the first time that Mr. DeJong engaged in behavior that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

A. When we first took off, about the second day.

Q. And what happened at that time?

A. He was mentioning something about would I be the kind of person to be interested in someone like him.

Q. And what did you respond?

A. I was shocked. I was just staring at [40]him.

Q. Were you married at the time?

A. No.

Q. Was he?

A. I don't know.

Q. And you were alone with him on the truck at this point?

A. Yes, ever since I got to Puyallup, Washington.

Q. And how many times did he ask you that?

A. A certain amount of times during those— I mean, it's hard to say. I don't know. It was the beating that got me the worst. It was not so bad as the sexual harassment.

Q. And what was your response to him when he asked you if you would be interested in him — in someone like him?

A, I don't recall responding to him, I just stayed quiet. I guess, because I remember him saying, Well, I can satisfy a woman like you. Oh, I know how to handle a woman, someone like you.

I remember I said, Sure, I'm sure you could. I'm sure you can. You are old enough to be my grandpa.

[41]Q. You told him that?

A. Yes.

Q. And these are also comments that were made on the truck when just the two of you were present?

A. Yes.

Q. Were those comments made early in the time when you got on the truck or —

A. Within the first week.

Q. Did you tell anyone at the time that those comments had been made?

A. No.

Q. And approximately how many times did he tell you that he could satisfy a woman like you?

A. That was the time only, I guess.

Q. One time. Did he state that he knows how to handle a woman like you just once?

A. (Nodding head.)

Q. And what was the next time Mr. DeJong engaged in behavior that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

Appendix BB

A. When I was very sound asleep —I don't recall where it was or what state. I knew about stories from the Fontana terminal that they tell [42]you hide your belongings, your wallet, your money. I would hide mine between my legs, inside my panties, so— because I was robbed at the motel when we were doing orientation. My paperwork and stuff had gotten stolen from me.

So I started hiding my wallet inside — my belongings inside my panties because in the pockets it would fall off when you sleep.

Q. Is this just while you slept you stuck it there?

A. Yes. And one night John DeJong had gone into my underwears and fished out my wallet to take out the gas card, the Comdata card, when we would diesel. I did not know this until two days later when he happened to mention, By the way, I have your Comdata card for diesel. I had to get it from you the other night because we were out of diesel.

Q. How did he know where to look for it?

A. Exactly. I would like to know that, too.

Q. You had not told him that you kept it there?

A. No. I was in so much shock, then I just don't recall a lot from there.

[43]Q. Do you recall when that was, how many days had you been on the truck together?

A. It was already about two weeks, two and a half weeks, give or take.

Q. How many times did he do that?

A. Once.

Q. And did you tell anyone about it at the time?

A. I told the dispatch— the female.

Q. You told a female dispatcher?

A. The one that— the assistant of that guy Brian. I don't recall their names.

Q. A female dispatcher out of Washington'?

A. Yes.

Q. Was she your direct fleet manager or no?

A. I just know they were dispatchers.

Q. Okay. And you believe Brian was a dispatcher, as well?

A. Yes.

Q. So you believe there were two dispatchers who worked in Washington?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. A female and a male?

A. Uh-huh.

[44]Q. Do you recall how you got in touch with the female?

A. Within those two and a half weeks or so, I ended up getting a Nextel phone that was on sale in a truck stop. They only needed $50, which I only had just about that much, and they would hook up the phone for you. It was around that time when I started calling that lady with my Nextel phone.

Q. Okay.

A. I think it was the pay-as-you-go phones or something like that. 1 can't recall that phone very well.

Q. Okay. So you believe you called her from the cell phone?

A. I know I did because I didn't know how to use the Qualcomm. I did not know — I learned eventually, but I did not know how. He was supposed to teach me, train me. He was my lead driver. He was supposed to train me.

Q. And you believe it was about two and a half weeks in when you called?

A. Give or take. It was something I like that.

Q. And did you call her while you were on [45]the truck or from a truck stop or where?

A. From a truck stop where he wouldn't hear me, where he couldn't hear me.

Q. And this was after he took the wallet out of your panties?

A. No. It's hard to recall because in the first week he was talking that way. In the same first week, he beat me for a mistake I had done. After the beating, it just kept going. It just kept happening.

Q. When was the first time that he beat you?

A. In the first week.

Q. What happened?

A. We were going out of Washington, going up a very steep mountain. I did not know how to downshift. I did not know how to drive. That's why he is there for. He went to the back to go to sleep, and when we were coming up to this steep mountain, the truck started rolling back. I didn't know how to downshift to –

Q. Do you want to take a moment?

A. I'm fine.

I didn't know how to downshift to keep [46]going up. He jumps out of the back and he grabs the stick shift and it starts grinding. He keep — he started yelling to push the clutch, push the clutch, and I did. He goes, Rev up the RPMs, and I did. And it wouldn't go in and we are — I just put both my foot on the brake because I was scared.

Q. So the truck had been rolling backwards?

A. The truck was rolling down and it was in an area where there was a lot of traffic, so there was a line of cars behind us. And it was — I almost took a whole bunch of cars.

But he got it in gear, and we slowly started going up again. And when we started going, that is when he started hitting me really hard, as I was driving up the hill. He cussed me out, and he went back to the back again.

Once I got to the other side, he had to come back again and help me but he was telling me, You stupid Mexican, cussing at me and putting me really — putting me down. He was putting me down really bad.

Q. Did he hit you with his fist or

A. Fist.

Q. On what part of your body did he hit [47]you?

A. Right here on my arm (indicating), and that was just the first time.

Q. Did you tell anyone about it at that time?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was that the time when you called the female fleet manager?

A. When I was able to get a hold of a phone.

Q. You don't recall if that was before or after?

A. I don't recall. I could have used a payphone. I know there was a 1-800 number or something, but I couldn't call — I got a hold of her and I told her, Please get me out of this truck. He hurt me. He beat me. He's talking really nasty.

Oh, just make it back, she said. Just make it back, and we'll route you with someone else, but they kept sending us further and further away.

Q. So you believe you told her that he beat you and was talking nasty to you. Did you tell her anything else?

[48]A. I told Brian too. He also said, Just wait it out until we can route you back.

Q, How long in between the times that you spoke to the female did you call Brian? Was it the female you spoke to first?

A. I probably spoke to either one of them. I spoke to her. I spoke to him. I spoke back to her. I blocked so much of this out, I just— I was terrified. I just blocked so much of it out, to be honest. That's why I didn't want to do this because I didn't want to have to remember it.

Q. So they basically told you, We will get you off the truck but you have to get back?

A. Just wait it out until we can get you back to Puyallup, Washington, and we'll get you a different lead driver.

Q. How long was it in between the time you raised your first complaint and the time they got you off the truck?

A. The first week and a half or the first week when he hit me.

Q. How many times did you speak to the female fleet manager about your complaints?

A. As many as I could. As many as she [49]would take the calls.

Q. You don't recall specifically?

A. No.

Q. How many times did you talk to Brian?

A. The same amount of time.

Q. You don't recall?

A. No.

Q. Did you tell anyone else, other than Brian and the female fleet manager?

A. I didn't know who else to tell.

Q. Did you ever call human resources?

A. I didn't have the number. I don't recall this book. I first saw this book, believe it or not, when I got in the truck with Juan Ponce.

Q. I'm sorry. With who?

A. Juan. That was my co-driver I got later on. That is when I first saw this book. I remember it, but it was all dirty and everything. And I remember it because of this, it was this (indicating), because he was the one that ended up teaching me what he needed to teach me, and he was not a lead driver. He was my co-driver. The poor man had to take me in not knowing nothing because the lead drivers taught me nothing.

[50]Q. Going back to your time with Mr. DeJong. How many times did he beat you?

A. Twice.

Q. When was the second time?

Appendix BB

A. When I was stopped by an officer for speeding because I was going down, and, again, I did not know how to— how to control— how to downshift. I was learning. I was learning and the officer stopped me, and he came to this side.

He said something about door. I misunderstood him, so I jumped out of the truck and I ran around to the other side, to the driver side —passenger side, and he looked at me odd. And he goes, What are you doing? I said, You said the door was open. He goes, No, I was asking you to unlock the passenger side. Oh, I'm sorry.

So in that - I went around again and unlocked, but John stayed in the back. And the officer says, You do realize you were speeding? I go, No, sir. Well, I was trying to slow down but I can't control all of that weight and my lead driver needs to help me, and he's in the back sleeping.

So he called out John and he asked him, Are you her lead driver? He goes, Yes. Well, can [51]I see your logs? Oh, Lord, that was a bad day because he got so mad. He did not give me a ticket. I did not get a ticket. He just gave me a warning, told me — verbal warning. He said, Just be careful here in—I think it was in Ohio. I'm not sure. He goes, We have speed limit of 55. I go, Yes, sir. I'm so sorry.

And as soon as the officer left, he started hitting me on this side, and he hit me so hard because I was sitting on the passenger side, closing the door and securing it when the officer left. And he started just hitting me. He hit my head and caused me knots on the head and hit all over my arm (indicating). And I just— — I could not take it. I guess I was in a cloud after that because I couldn't remember nothing else after, pretty much.

Q. Do you recall when approximately that happened?

A. I think it was the last week I was with him. The last week I was with him because when I did call Brian or that woman, Pat, and I told them, He hit me again. I'm all black and blue. Please get me off this truck, and that is when they [52]finally routed us back. They were real nervous.

Q. The first time that he hit you, where were you, do you recall?

A. Excuse me?

Q. The first time that he hit you, do you recall what state you were in?

A. In Puyallup, Washington. We were barely starting, barely getting out of there on our first load.

Q. And what other behavior, if any, did Mr. DeJong engage in that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

A. It was that panty thing. That was it.

Q. The one time he took your wallet?

A. He would talk on the phone with some girlfriend that he would talk sexually on the phone, so I would have to step out of the truck.

Q. Did he ask you to step out of the truck or did you—

A. Yes, when he would get upset, he would always — he would throw me out of the truck in very cold temperature weather out there in the United States, whatever state I was at, and I had to wait until he was done talking on the phone with [53]that woman.

Q. And how did you know that he was having sexual conversations?

A. Because I asked him. I said, John, would you stop it. I'm in here. That's when he got mad and he told me to get out. You don't like it, get out.

Q. Originally, you were on the truck and heard some of the conversations?

A. Yes.

Q. You told him you didn't like it and he said, Get out?

A. Yes. It was like phone sex he was having with the woman.

Q. How many times did he have phone sex?

A. Oh, many times.

Q. Do you recall how many?

A. Oh, the count of five, six, seven times, whenever he could get a hold of the lady.

Q. Do you recall if you reported that to Pat or Brian?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall when you reported that to them?

[54]A. It was when I was complaining about the beatings and what he had done about the panty thing, and I let them know. Empty promises.

Q. So you believe that you complained to them the first week you were on the truck together?

A. Oh yes, I did. Because we were told in orientation, if we did not get along with our lead drivers, to report it right away so we could be removed and be given a different lead driver. That was what we were told in orientation.

Q. You were also told you could contact HR if you had any complaints?

A. Yes, I think so, we were. I just didn't know the number. I remember asking John for it. He wouldn't give it to me.

Q. Do you recall if Mr. DeJong engaged in any other behavior that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

A. No.

Q. Did he ever proposition you?

A. Yeah, the first week.

Q. Do you believe he ever touched you in a sexual way?

A. Yes, he did, when he went fishing into [55]my panties for my wallet.

Q. On any other occasion did he touch you in a sexual way?

A. No.

Q. Other than the first time when he asked you if you could see yourself with a man like him, did he make any other propositions?

A. No.

Q. Did he ever make any sexual comments directed towards you?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the sexual comments?

A. He liked my big boobs.

Q. When did he say that?

A. In the first week we were in the truck. I guess that's what led to, Could you see yourself being with a man like me and I would know how to satisfy a woman, stuff like that.

Q. That was all in the same conversation?

A. It was — I think that's what had got to the conversation because of my breasts.

Q. And do you recall if you told Pat or Brian about that?

A. Yes.

[56] Q. That was all in your first complaint to them?

A. Pretty much, yes.

[59]Q. Did you ever report any complaints about Mr. DeJong to any senior executives at CRST?

A. Yes, I did. At Cedar Rapids, I talked to a gentleman there. That is when I met — Susan Ayers ended up being my dispatcher then. That was for Juan Ponce.

Q. That was for what?

A. Juan Ponce, my co-driver. I went and talked to a gentleman there.

Q. Do you recall who you spoke to?

A. I can't recall his name, but he was HR. And I told him everything that happened, and he said he was going to go look into it, and I never heard from him again.

[65]Q. You have been handed what has been marked as CRST Exhibit 124. This Trip Inquiry reflects that you were on the truck with Mr. Booth from August 30. 2005. to September 8th 2005. Does that sound about right?

A. Repeat the question please.

Q. It shows that you got on the truck with Mr. Booth on August 26, 2005 and that you got off the truck on September 8, 2005. Does that sound right to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall who your fleet manager was at the time that you drove with Mr. Booth?

A. Same people.

Q. Same two. Do you recall if it was the man or the woman. Pat or Brian?

A. It was the woman that put me with him.

Q. Do you believe she was your fleet manager?

A. I think so. She was the one— both of them would say which truck with whom we would go. I thought that that was the fleet manager.

Q. Okay. You believe they were both your [66]fleet manager?

A. Yes, or their assistants. I don't know.

Q. Do you recall if you had any home time during the time that you were on the truck with Mr. Booth?

A. No home time for me. It was his home time.

Q. You did get off the truck?

A. I was stuck in the truck. I only got off to use— he parked the truck at his mother's house, and I had to play housekeeper for his family just so I could use the restroom and bathe.

Q. How long were you there?

A. His home time.

Q. Do you recall how long that was?

A. A week, I think.

Q. Did you have the opportunity to go home?

A. No.

Q. Did your fleet managers tell you you had to stay on the truck during the home time?

A. Yes.

Q. But you weren't driving?

A. No. The truck was parked, and it was his truck. He was an owner-operator or something, [67]so he took the key.

Q. Did you stop at any of CRST's terminals during the time that you drove with Mr. Booth?

A. I can't recall.

Q. When was the first time that Mr. Booth engaged in behavior that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

A. It was after.

Q. After what?

A. After we took off. He was angry because the female dispatcher, they had something together, but I made a mistake. When she called or Qualcommed it, something, I remember typing, He's with his wife. She found out. He got mad. She got mad, so I was starting to be mistreated.

Q. You believe that Mr. Booth had some sort of relationship with the female fleet manager?

A. Yes.

Q. Why did you believe that?

A. Because I could not type very well on the thing, so I told her call me or I'll call you. She called me and she asked me, Where's Charles? I said, He's at some camp — cabin out there in the woods. He's not alone? No, he's with his wife, [68]girlfriend, I don't know, with his kids.

She was very, very furious, and I guess she talked to him and he – after that started treating me different.

Q. And what did he do"?

A. On the way back or somehow we were routed back towards Puyallup. We stopped at some terminals— not terminals, at truck stops. There was one night I was hungry, and we stopped at this truck stop and he got himself some hot dogs and whatnot and I got myself some food.

But he loved to play on the radio, on the CB radio, and he had the light on. And I was sitting there eating my food, and I guess some of the truckers around there noticed who they were talking to. They saw me, so on the radio said, Have her do a peep show, have her do a peep show.

And I did not understand radio, that kind of talk, truck driver talk. I don't understand that. All I know is he turned around, he said, Flap them out. Let's see a peep show. I go, No. He said, Show them, just go like this, just rip off your shirt and just show them some tits. I go, No. I said, Why would I want to do [69]that? He goes, Well they'll pay 100 bucks a peep. We need the money. I just left my food there, and I went to the back.

Q. So some other truck drivers had said over the radio that they wanted a peep show?

A. Yes. And he wanted me to show them my breasts.

Q. And you refused?

A. I refused. I told him, That's not right.

Q. And this was after the home time?

A. After the home time.

Q. And approximately how many days were you on the truck with him after that happened?

A. I think it was about a day or two. We were not that far from Washington, from Puyallup, within that period of time. He would drive while he was typing. He was typing away, trying to — to her. He was Qualcomming to her that whole time while he was driving because I remember I got up to go to the front and I saw him, he was driving as he was typing, which is very dangerous. And I kind of looked over his shoulder, and he was typing to her and I remember reading, I want her off my truck.

Appendix BB

[70]Q. How long were you supposed to be on the truck with him originally?

A. The remainder of the training.

Q. Did you end up staying on with him for the remainder of your training?

A. He didn't train me. I was just there for the remainder of my training, but I wasn't trained. I was at him with home time— his home time on my time.

Q. Did Mr. Booth engage in any other behavior that you felt was sexual or inappropriate?

A. No.

Q. Did you tell anyone about the peep show request?

A. Yeah, that lady.

Q. You told your female dispatcher?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you tell her?

A. When we got there and he left. She sent him to a motel room, and she didn't want to hear it.

Q. So when you got to Washington, you met with her face to face?

A. Yes. I asked her. Why are you [71]taking— I'm not done with my training. I didn't learn nothing.

Q. And what did she say when you told her?

A. She didn't want to hear it. She cut me off. She was very rude. She was very upset with me. She said, The taxi will be here in a few minutes to take you to your motel room — or, no, to the bus station. They stuck me on a bus and sent me home.

Q. And were you paired up with someone shortly thereafter?

A. No. I had to look for my own co-driver.

Q. How did you find a co-driver?

A. I called Fontana, and I told them what had happened, that I was no longer driving and I was done with my training. I don't recall who I talked to, but I did complain to him, too, about what had happened, and he didn't want to hear it.

Q. Who was this?

A. I don't recall. I don't recall. I just know that I did let them know that I was available for a co-driver, that I needed to get back to work.

Q. Was it a fleet manager that you were [72]talking with?

A. I think so, but it was a male.

Q. And this was over the phone?

A. It was over the phone.

Q. And what did you tell him specifically about any of the behavior of Mr. Booth or Mr. DeJong?

A. I just said shortly, I said, I was beaten, I was fondled, I was humiliated, and I was taught nothing. I was being very sarcastic. I was being sarcastic. I was being rude, I know, but I was just angry.

The whole experience of learning how to truck driving was going down the drain for me. My dream of being a truck driver was going down the drain. But I told him, I need a co-driver. I would rather have a female, like I have been requesting from the very first day I was there. We wanted female co- — female trainers. And they told us it was very rare that they would give us a lead driver— a female lead driver, that we would have to take what we can.

Appendix CC

[78]Q. Do you remember the name of your dispatcher back then?

A. We called him Livi, Livingston.

Q. It was John Livingston?

A. Yes.

Q. There is a reference to conversation between you and John in your letter that I'm going to refer you to. It's the second page of your letter, the third paragraph on the bottom.

Do you see that, the May 17 entry?

[79]A. Uh-huh.

Q. Could you read that out loud, please?

A. "I talked to Sherry Cook and she talks to John about getting me off the truck."

Q. Could you read that paragraph?

A. "I had talked with John the day before but was unable to let me him know how bad it had gotten. When I was packing, Jason grabbed my"— it's supposed to say leg— "so hard it left marks."

Q. The reference to John there is to John Livingston?

A. Yes.

Q. What you were saying there is you had spoken to Mr. Livingston on the 16th of May?

A. Yes, and previous to that also.

Q. There is no reference in this letter to any prior contacts with Mr. Livingston?

A. I had talked to him the day before but was unable to let him know it was getting worse.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. I guess, you know, how bad it was getting, I'm sorry. Was unable to let him know how bad it was getting, gotten, but I know I had [80]talked to him previously, you know, and the problems with Jason slapping me in the ass and on the thigh and on the head and telling me the bed didn't work and stuff like that. It just continued to escalate.

Q. What I'm trying to focus on right now is what the letter tells us about conversations with Mr. Livingston. This paragraph says: "On May 17 I talked to Sherry Cook and she talks to John about getting me off the truck"?

A. Yes.

Q. The reference there is to John Livingston, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. "And talked to John the day before but I was unable to let him know how bad it had gotten."

A. Yes.

Q. Correct. That's what that says?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. This tells us on May 16 you directly spoke to Mr. Livingston, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And what you say here is "I was unable [81]to let him know how bad it had gotten"?

A. Yes.

Q. It doesn't refer to any prior discussions with Mr. Livingston?

A. No.

Q. And it doesn't refer to any previous discussions with dispatch, does it?

A. No, but I believe what I'm trying to stress in the contents of how bad it had gotten meaning it had been discussed with him previously and it was getting worse.

Q. The summary starts on April 16, correct?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. You have to answer verbally.

A. Yes.

Q. And it goes right up to April 17 at the end of this, correct?

A. Yes or no. May.

Q. I'm sorry. Did I say April again? May 17, sorry. And no where in that paragraph relating to what happened on May 16 and 17 is there a reference to you talking to dispatch about your problems with Mr. Standridge, correct?

[82]A. Correct. There is no reference to it.

Q. On May 17 is when you made this delivery to Kohls in Wisconsin?

A. Yes.

Q. Your training with Mr. Standridge was over, was it not?

A. No.

Q. It would have continued longer?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were taken off of his truck when you made your complaints about what was happening to you, correct, at the end? It was because of your complaints that you were taken out of that training situation, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In terms of things that Mr. Standridge did, looking at it today, is this a — let me ask it differently.

In terms of things that Mr. Standridge did towards you, is there anything in reading this letter today that you think you left out?

A. Yes. I didn't mention in the letter how many times he slapped my ass, slapped my thigh, smacked me in the forehead. I didn't put [83]in here how many times he references how big his dick is. I tried to make this somewhat of a summary, so I didn't give every word that was said, every action that was done because it was on a daily basis that he'd slapped me in the ass, it was on a daily basis that he would smack me in the forehead because I was leaning forward and in his view. Some of these things were discussed verbally over the phone with Sherry and Lisa, Sherry Cook being my recruiter.

Q. You said that Mr. Standridge slapped you on the thigh, slapped you on the ass and the forehead situations were ones where he was pushing you out of the way, hitting your forehead to push you back out of his view, is that what he was doing?

A. Yes.

Q. The occasions where he slapped you on the thigh, how often did that occur and what were the circumstances?

A. As the time with him progressed, it happened more and more often. The first it was maybe one every two or three days, and then it got to almost a daily occurrence when he was touching [84]me.

Q. Would this happen when you were sitting in the truck next to him?

A. Sometimes it would be sitting in the back, if he came up behind when I was climbing in the truck, he had no problem with helping me by putting his hands on my ass and pushing me in.

Q. I'm trying to break this down. The slaps on the thigh, those occurred when you were sitting next to him in the truck?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the circumstances?

A. The circumstances would be that he was driving down the road and decided to smack me.

Q. Did he hit you hard?

A. He hit me so hard at one time it left a welt for hours.

Q. Why would he do that?

A. He said he was playing. As far as his intentions, I can't tell you. You would have to ask him.

Q. Was he doing it out of anger as far as you could tell?

MS. SZROMBA: Objection. Foundation.

[85]BY THE WITNESS:

A. He didn't seem angry with me, no.

BY MR. MARKOWSKI:

Q. You say he would hit you hard sometimes on the thigh?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you think it was sexual?

A. Yes.

Q. What caused you to think it was sexual?

A. His actions. It isn't appropriate to touch someone who doesn't want to be touched and he would slap my thigh and think it was funny.

Q. And you said he also would slap you on the ass?

A. Yes.

Q. How often would that happen?

A. Two or three times a week.

Q. Was that similar to the slaps on the thigh?

A. Yes.

Q. Were there any other occasions where he touched you in a way that you considered to be sexual?

A. I was getting out of the truck one day [86]and he grabbed me around the waist and helped me down, made reference to sliding down his pole.

Q. On that occasion he touched you around the waist?

A. Yes.

Q. Did that happen once?

A. He pulled me to him more than once, but getting out of the truck once.

Q. Were there any other occasions that you considered him to have touched you in a sexual way?

A. I had asked him one time after he had smacked me on the forehead if I were a man would he continue touching me and he said no.

Q. My question was were there any other occasions where he touched you in a way that you considered to be sexual?

A. Yes.

Q. What else?

A. Any time he touched me I considered it that way, especially after I asked him if I were a man, would you do this?

Q. Other than the things you described, were there other occasions where Mr. Standridge [87]touched you in what you considered to be a sexual way?

A. Because I had told him from the beginning I did not and would not want a relationship from him, any time he touched me it was unwelcome.

Q. What I'm trying to find out is when that happened, other than the situations that you described?

A. It happened on a daily basis.

Q. In what way?

A. In what ways? Let's see, the top bunk wouldn't work and so he would climb in bed while I was back there sleeping.

Q. How often did that happen?

A. Four, five times and I would get up.

Q. Anything else?

A When we went to get the hotel room because the truck broke down he told them he only needed one bed. I considered it sexually harassing that he would expect me to sleep in a hotel room with him. He told me the company would not provide for more than one room and at the time I did not know any better and I told the clerk [88]that we needed two beds. At a truck stop—

Q. And that's what happened then?

A. Yes. We got two beds, but I've since learned that I should not have had to sleep with him in the same room, not in the hotel room. And in a truck stop, there was references to showering together and I did not know at the time how showering worked and luckily the very first clerk said would you like a shower room of your own and I said yes, I would, and after that I got my own shower room. I always got my own shower room.

Q. You never shared a shower room with Mr. Standridge?

A. No, but he told me I would have to but I never had to. I was prepared not to shower for 28 days.

Q. We're trying to go through occasions where you say he touched you in what you considered to be a sexual way.

Other than what you've described, is there anything else?

A. No.

Q. How quickly after you got on the truck with Mr. Standridge did you consider there to be [89]problems?

A. Within a few days he told me that he wanted — he didn't want me to drive his truck. He didn't want to teach me to drive his truck. He wanted a wife and a log book on the truck and I told him he could have my log book, and other than that, I was there to learn how to drive the truck and that was it.

[125]Q. How big is Jason Standridge?

A. He had told me that he used to be a amateur professional wrestler. He towered over me and weighed well over 300 pounds.

Q. Tell me tell us what happened exactly between you and Jason Standridge on your last day on the truck with him or the day you called Sherry Cook?

A. I was trying to pack up my things because it was going to be time to go home and we were close to Michigan being in Wisconsin. He grabbed a hold of my leg. I was up on the stairs to the upper bunk getting a coat, grabbed a hold of my leg and pulled me down and into his chest and he put his arms around me, pulled me to him putting his hands on my rear end, my bottom and getting in my face and he had told me that he wanted to have sex with me and that no one had ever turned him down.

Q. He told you that at this time after he pulled you down on the ladder?

A. Yes, violently pulled me down because it left his hand print on my leg.

Q. And you say he pulled you close to him [126]by pulling in your bottom; is that right?

A. Uh-huh.

MR. MARKOWSKI: Objection. Leading.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. What was the — you are touching his chest and touching his genitals with his body?

A: My whole body was against.

MR. MARKOWSKI: Excuse me. Objection.

Objection, leading.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. My whole body was against his body.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. And then what happened?

A. I wiggled out of his hands and I got out of the truck.

Q. And I think you testified that he you made your phone calls; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. What was Sherry Cook's response to your call? What did she say to you when you told her what happened?

A. She told me that she would make some phone calls and that she'll call me right back.

Q. And what did — did she call you back?

[127]A. Yes.

Q. What did she tell you when she called you back?

A. That they were going to send me by bus, that he was going to be instructed to take me to the bus station.

Q. Sherry Cook told you that Jason would be driving you to the bus station?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you, in fact, get to the bus station?

A. Jason drove me in the semi truck to the bus station.

Q. Did Sherry suggest to you that you could take a cab or go any other way to the bus station?

A. Nothing was suggested. It was just nonchalant he'll drive me there.

Q. How did you feel getting back on the truck with Jason after that?

A. I was nervous about it, but I didn't know what else to do. They said that the bus was leaving at this time and I needed to be there.

[129]Q. So did anyone ever tell you that you don't — that the company will pay for two rooms if you and your co-driver are different sexes?

A. Is what you're told when the situation occurs when the truck breaks down that they will spend a certain amount of money, it's usually about a hundred dollars per night for a room and if you can find two rooms for 50 bucks or less, you can get two rooms, if not, they want you to room together.

Q. Did you — at your orientation for CRST had you heard about any problems that any female drivers had working there?

A. We were always talking about horror stories about women being raped, women getting together with their lead drivers and then being disappointed because the lead driver went home and being abused, left. They were always talking about someone being left alongside the road in a truck stop or in a rest area.

Q. Were these stories being told by students or trainers or who was talking about [130]these things?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Object to lack of foundation.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. It was students talked about it. They were talking about what they had heard. When other drivers came in you didn't know if they were a lead driver or not. They would just say that they were a driver and they would talk about it. I had heard a driver say he had left somebody alongside the road.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. Did you get the sense at any time about what the company's view of employees who wanted to change drivers frequently?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Object to the form of the question.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. After a while, it became apparent that you were kind of dubbed a bad co-driver if you needed to change a lot.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. What gave you that impression?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Same objection.

BY THE WITNESS:

[131]A. I was told that I needed to be able to keep a co-driver to keep my job.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. Who told you that?

A. Jeff, a dispatcher.

Q. Approximately when did you hear this from Jeff?

A. I'd been with the company over a year, around a year. I had gone through quite a few co-drivers.

Q. When Jeff told you this, did he have a conversation with you about why you might have had several co-drivers in your career with CRSTI?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Object to the form of the question.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. No.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. Did he ask you if you were having particular problems with co-drivers?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Same objection.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. No.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

[132]Q. Did you ever complain to your dispatcher about your problems with Jason?

A. I had talked to Livi about it.

Q. How many times did you talk to Livi about it?

A. Twice.

Q. When was the first time approximately?

A. Within the first week.

Q. Do you remember where you were, what location, city?

A. I believe it was between Arizona and California, somewhere in that time frame.

Q. Was there something that happened that caused you to call him at that time?

A. We're told to call them and tell them how it's going and everything and I told him that he was slapping my ass and stuff and it was annoying for me to have this person touching me, but I felt like it was just a joke to everybody else.

Q. You felt it was a joke to who?

MR. MARKOWSKI: Object to the form of the question.

BY THE WITNESS:

[133]A. To Livi.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. You said you told him in this first call that Jason was slapping your ass; is that right?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. What else did you tell him, if anything that was —

A. I told him the bunk didn't work and he said that you have to get into a terminal and have that looked at.

Q. What made you think the bunk didn't work?

A. I was told it didn't work.

Q. Who told you it didn't work?

A. Jason.

Q. Did you ever find out what the problem with the bunk was?

A. He used the catch release as a coat rack.

Q. So, it, in fact, wasn't broken?

A. It was not broken at all.

Q. So you told Livi in this first call about the bunk, about Jason slapping your ass, [134]anything else that you remember telling Livi?

A. I don't recall anything.

Q. What do you recall Livi's response was, and by Livi, we all understand you mean Livingston; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. What was Livingston's response, if any?

A. That we'd have to get the bunk fixed at a terminal and he really didn't say much except, you know, he felt that — I felt that he felt that it was just in play, all in good play.

Q. What made you think that that was his view of it?

A. Because it was kind of ignored, put aside.

Q. He didn't follow up on the phone call about it?

A. No.

MR. MARKOWSKI: Objection. Leading.

BY MS. SZROMBA:

Q. When was the next time you called Livingston about Jason?

A. I believe it was on the way to Wisconsin.

[135]Q. Which was your last trip with Jason?

A. Yes.

Q. What caused you to call Livingston at that time?

Appendix CC

A. Everything was still continuing. He was continuing to slap me and he'd gotten — it's in the letter that he went by his home and gotten a dog and the dog was causing problems and so I contacted him then.

1. CRST admits that the Plaintiff purports to invoke this Court's jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 451, 1331, 1337, 1343, and 1345 and purports to bring this action pursuant to Section 706(f)(1) and (3) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3) and Section 102 of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. § 1981a. CRST denies the remaining allegations of Paragraph 1, including any inference that it has violated any of these statutes or that Plaintiff is entitled to any relief.

2. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 2.

3. CRST admits the allegations of Paragraph 3.

4. CRST admits the allegations of Paragraph 4.

5. CRST admits the allegations of Paragraph 5.

6. CRST admits the allegations of the first sentence of Paragraph 6. CRST denies the remaining allegations of Paragraph 6.

7. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 7.

8. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 8.

9. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 9.

10. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 10.

11. CRST denies the allegations of Paragraph 11.

ADDITIONAL AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

Without assuming the burden of proof with respect to any issue or matter when the burden of proof would otherwise be on the Plaintiff, CRST asserts the following defenses:

1. CRST took reasonable care to prevent and correct unlawful harassment, and Monica Starke and similarly situated female employees failed to take advantage of corrective opportunities or otherwise to avoid harm, if any.

2. Monica Starke and similarly situated female employees have failed to mitigate their damages, if any.

3. To the extent some or all of the acts complained of involve conduct outside of a CRST workplace or outside of CRST working time, CRST has no legal responsibility for such personal activities.

4. Plaintiff's claims are barred to the extent they are untimely.

5. Plaintiff's claims are barred to the extent an individual on whose behalf it purports to act failed to exhaust available administrative remedies.

6. Plaintiff's claims for punitive damages are barred by CRST's good faith efforts to comply with applicable law.

Appendix EE

WHEREFORE, Defendant CRST respectfully requests that this Court enter judgment in its favor dismissing with prejudice Plaintiff's First Amended Complaint and award CRST such other and further relief as the Court may deem appropriate.

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

Case No. 1:07-cv-00095-LRR

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION,

Plaintiff,

v.

CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC.,

Defendant.

FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT

Jury Trial Demand

NATURE OF THE ACTION

This is an action under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. ("Title VII"), and Title I of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. § 1981a to correct unlawful employment practices on the basis of sex, and to provide appropriate relief to Monika Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees of defendant CRST Van Expedited, Inc. ("CRST") who were adversely affected by such practices. Ms. Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees were adversely affected by such practices when their lead drivers or team drivers subjected them to sexual harassment and to a sexually hostile working environment based on their gender, and CRST failed to prevent, correct, and protect them from the harassment and hostile working environment.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

1. Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§ 451, 1331, 1337, 1343, and 1345. This action is authorized and instituted pursuant to Section 706(f)(1) and (3) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3) ("Title VII") and Section 102 of the Civil Rights Act of 1991, 42 U.S.C. § 1981a.

2. The unlawful employment practices alleged were committed in substantial part within the jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa.

PARTIES

3. The plaintiff, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"), is the agency of the United States of America charged with administering, interpreting, and enforcing Title VII, and is expressly authorized to bring this action by Section 706(f)(1) and (3) of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(1) and (3).

4. At all relevant times, the defendant CRST was an Iowa corporation doing business in the Cedar Rapids, Iowa and elsewhere, and continuously had at least 15 employees.

5. At all relevant times, CRST has continuously been an employer engaged in an industry affecting commerce within the meaning of Sections 701(b), (g), and (h) of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e(b), (g), and (h).

STATEMENT OF CLAIMS

6. More than 30 days prior to the institution of this lawsuit, Monika Starke, then a CRST employee, filed a charge with the EEOC alleging violations of Title VII by CRST. All conditions precedent to the institution of this lawsuit have been fulfilled.

7. Since at least July 2005, CRST engaged in unlawful employment practices in violation of Sections 703(a) and 704(a) of Title VII, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2 and 2000e-3. Among other things, two of its lead drivers subjected Starke to sexual harassment during their supervision of Starke (including, but not limited to, unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments), which further created a sexually hostile and offensive work environment. CRST is liable for the harm caused by the harassment and the hostile and offensive work environment because of the actions of its lead drivers and because of its failure and refusal to take prompt and appropriate action to prevent, correct, and protect Starke from the harassment and the hostile environment, culminating in her discharge from employment with CRST.

Appendix FF

8. Other similarly situated female employees of CRST were also subjected to sexual harassment and a sexually hostile and offensive work environment while working for CRST, including among other things, unwelcome sexual conduct, other unwelcome physical touching, propositions for sex, and sexual comments from their lead drivers or team drivers. CRST is liable for harm caused by the harassment and the hostile and offensive work environment because of the actions of its lead drivers or team drivers and because of its failure and refusal to take prompt and appropriate action to prevent, correct, and protect its female employees from the harassment and the hostile environment.

9. The effect of the practices complained of in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above has been to deprive Starke and a class of similarly situated female employees of equal employment opportunities, and to otherwise adversely affect their status as employees, because of sex.

10. The unlawful employment practices complained of in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above were intentional.

11. The unlawful employment practices complained of in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above were done with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of Starke and the class of similarly situated female employees.

Appendix FF

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, EEOC respectfully requests that this Court:

A. Grant a permanent injunction enjoining CRST and its officers, successors, and assigns, and all persons in active concert or participation with them, from engaging in sexual harassment, any other employment practice which discriminates on the basis of sex.

B. Order CRST to institute and carry out policies, practices, and programs which provide equal employment opportunities for women, and which eradicate the effects of its past and present unlawful employment practices.

C. Order CRST to make Starke and the class of similarly situated female employees whole by providing appropriate backpay and benefits, with pre-judgment interest, in amounts to be determined at trial, and other affirmative relief necessary to eradicate the effects of its unlawful employment practices, including frontpay and/or reinstatement.

D. Order CRST to make Starke and the class of similarly situated female employees whole by providing compensation for past and future pecuniary and nonpecuniary losses resulting from the unlawful practices described in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above, including (but not limited to) emotional pain, suffering, and humiliation, in amounts to be determined at trial.

E. Order CRST to pay Starke and the class of similarly situated female employees punitive damages for CRST's malicious and reckless conduct described in Paragraphs 7 and 8 above, in amounts to be determined at trial.

F. Grant such further relief as the Court deems necessary and proper in the public interest.

G. Award EEOC its costs of this action.

JURY TRIAL DEMAND

EEOC requests a jury trial on all questions of fact raised by its complaint.

Charging Party,

vs.

CRST INTERNATIONAL, INC.
Attn: James T. Barnes
3930 16th Avenue SW
Cedar Rapids, IA 52404

Respondent.

DETERMINATION

Under the authority vested in me by the Commission, I issue the following determination as to the merits of the subject charge filed under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Title VII and all requirements for coverage have been met.

Appendix GG

Charging Party alleged that she was discriminated against in violation of Title VII in that she was subjected to sexual harassment on the basis of her gender, female, and then subjected to disctriminatory terms and conditions of employment and discharged on the basis of retaliation in violation of Section 704(a) of Title VII.

I have considered all the evidence disclosed during the investigation and find that there is reasonable cause to believe that there is a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, including Section 704(a) in that the Respondent subjected the charging party to sexual harassment on the basis of her gender and then subjected her to discriminatory terms and conditions of employment and discharge on the basis of retaliation. In addition, I find that there is reasonable cause to believe that the Respondent has subjected a class of employees and prospective employees to sexual harassment, in violation of Title VII.

This determination is final. When the Commission finds that violations have occurred, it attempts to eliminate the alleged unlawful practices by informal methods of conciliation. Therefore, I invite the parties to join with the Commission in reaching a just resolution of this matter. Disclosure of information obtained by the Commission during the conciliation process will be made only in accordance with the Commission's Procedural Regulations (29 CPR Part 1601.26).

If the Respondent wishes to accept this invitation to participate in conciliation efforts, it may do so at this time by proposing terms for a conciliation agreement. That agreement should be provided to the Commission representative within (14) days of the date of this determination. The remedies for violations of the statutes we enforce are designed to make the identified victims whole, and to provide corrective and preventative relief. These remedies may include, as appropriate, an agreement by the Respondent not to engage in unlawful employment practices, placement of identified victims in positions they would have held but for discriminatory actions, back pay, restoration of lost benefits, injunctive relief, compensatory and/or punitive damages, and notice to employees of the violation(s) and the resolution of the claim.

Should the Respondent have further questions regarding the conciliation process or the conciliation terms it would like to propose, we encourage it to contact the assigned Commission representative. Should there be no response from the Respondent within (14) days, we may conclude that further conciliation efforts in this matter would be futile or non-productive.

DETERMINATION

Under the authority vested in me by the Commission, I issue the following determination as to the merits of the subject charge filed under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Title VII and all requirements for coverage have been met.

Appendix II

Charging Party alleged that she was discriminated against in violation of Title VII in that she was subjected to sexual harassment on the basis of her gender, female.

I have considered all the evidence disclosed during the investigation and find that there is reasonable cause to believe that there is a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, in that the Respondent subjected the charging party to sexual harassment on the basis of her gender. In addition, I find that there is reasonable cause to believe that the Respondent has subjected a class of employees and prospective employees to sexual harassment, in violation of Title VII.

Like and related to the charge, I have determined that the evidence obtained during the investigation establishes reasonable cause to believe that there is a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, in that the Respondent discharged the Charging Party and attempted to collect money from the Charging Party on the basis of retaliation in violation of Section 704(a) of Title VII.

This determination is final. When the Commission finds that violations have occurred, it attempts to eliminate the alleged unlawful practices by informal methods of conciliation. Therefore, I invite the parties to join with the Commission in reaching a just resolution of this matter. APPENDIX JJ — LETTER FROM JAMES T. BARNES TO PAM BLOOMER, DATED JANUARY 19, 2007

January 19, 2007

Equal Opportunity Commission
Ms. Pam Bloomer
310 W. Wisconsin Ave.
Milwaukee, WI 53203

Re: Sexual harassment complaints of Starke and Peeples

Dear Ms. Bloomer:

This letter and the accompanying attachments are offered by CRST International ("CRST") to address the concerns you raised in our recent phone conversation related to the two sexual harassment complaints of Monika Starke and Remcey Peeples. Generally, your concern focused on the conduct of CRST's male lead drivers when they are training female drivers.

Specifically, you stated that it seems the "mentality" is that it is acceptable for male lead drivers to exert power and influence over female students, which may create a hostile work environment for the female drivers. You also expressed concern regarding the number of complaints lodged against CRST based on alleged "sexual favors" that male lead drivers requested of female student drivers.

Role of Lead Driver. Lead drivers, by the very nature of their position, must exercise some degree of authority over student drivers, irrespective of the gender of the lead driver or the student driver. In order for student drivers to be qualified and have sufficient experience, they must have, generally, twenty-eight (28) days of training with a lead driver. This lead driver/student driver relationship is really no different than the role of supervisors in other industries and organizations. The "lead" is responsible for mentoring and training the "probationary" employee.

Number of Complaints alleging harassment. You stated that the "number" of complaints against CRST alleging sexual harassment is quite high. In fact, the number of complaints is actually quite minimal given the number of employees which CRST employs. The complaints of Ms. Starke and Ms. Peeples were received in December 2005 and January 2006, respectively. From December 2005 through present, CRST Van Expedited has delivered 4,715 loads with a male lead driver and female student. Of this number, there were 595 different "combinations" of male lead driver and female student drivers.

During this same period of time (12/05 through present), CRST's Human Resources Department was made aware of and investigated eight situations in which a female student alleged a male lead driver engaged in sexual harassment. Prompt remedial action designed to end the harassment was taken in each of these instances, and in only one situation did a student driver file an EEOC complaint. In short, by my calculations, only 1.3% of all female students who had a male lead driver had any kind of issue involving alleged sexual harassment.

Appendix JJ

CRST takes sexual harassment seriously. We recognize that lead drivers are perceived by students to be in a position of authority, and also that most often, there will not be any "witnesses" to what happens in the truck other than the two drivers. As a result, we are often unable to verify whether a complaint is "true" or not. What CRST can do, however, is take as many precautions as it can to prevent sexual harassment, and to end sexual harassment if and when it occurs. Accordingly, CRST is proactive in its approach to sexual harassment, and its precautions, procedures and policies include the following:

1. Lead driver training includes a training module regarding CRST's strict policy prohibiting sexual harassment (Exhibit A)
2. During orientation, all prospective employees are informed of CRST's harassment policy, including whom to contact in the event of any such harassment. (Exhibit B)
3. All lead drivers must sign a "Training Violation Policy Acknowledgement" (Exhibit C) and all prospective employees sign an acknowledgement of their understanding of CRST's harassment policy (Exhibit D)
4. All students are informed that they are able to make special requests regarding their training before it begins. I.e., female students may request to be trained by a lead driver of one sex or the other. (Exhibit E)
5. All fleet managers (dispatchers) receive sexual harassment training on how to handle various types of complaints of drivers, including complaints of harassment. Fleet managers are instructed to immediately offer to remove a student from the harasser (i.e., get a new lead driver), and are further instructed to give the information to Human Resources for prompt investigation and appropriate discipline.

6. Human Resources promptly investigates allegations of harassment and metes out appropriate discipline.
7. Human Resources' investigation of alleged harassment by a lead driver includes contacting other female drivers who have driven with the male lead driver to see whether any prior harassment occurred.

We hope this information alleviates your concerns. We respectfully request that the EEOC find "no probable cause" in these two cases.

Sincerely,

/s/_____

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA
CEDAR RAPIDS DIVISION

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION, Plaintiff, BARBARA GRANT, CINDY MOFFETT, LATESHA THOMAS, and NICOLE ANN CINQUEMANO, Plaintiff-Interveners, v. CRST VAN EXPEDITED, INC., Defendant.	)	Case No. 1:07-cv-00095-LRR

AMENDED ALLEGEDLY AGGRIEVED PERSONS CHART

EEOC is the source of the information in all columns except "CRST's comments."

Key to EEOC Comments:

1. EEOC was aware of this woman's allegations at the time of the Determination (July 12, 2007). Had CRST not ended conciliation, EEOC would have sought relief for her.

2. EEOC was not aware of this woman's allegations of sex harassment at the time of the Determination (July 12, 2007). Had CRST not ended conciliation, EEOC would have negotiated with CRST a process for identifying, locating, and assessing the relief she would receive in connection with a conciliated resolution of the class-wide reasonable cause determination. As of the date of failure of conciliation (August 28, 2007), CRST had created an investigation file regarding her allegations.

3. EEOC was not aware of this woman's allegations of sex harassment at the time of the Determination (July 12, 2007). Had CRST not ended conciliation, EEOC would have negotiated with CRST a process for identifying, locating, and assessing the relief she would receive in connection with a conciliated resolution of the class-wide reasonable cause determination.

4. This woman had not been harassed at the time of the Determination (July 12, 2007). Had CRST not ended conciliation, EEOC's conciliation efforts might have prevented her harassment.

5. This woman had not been harassed at the time of the Determination (July 12, 2007). Had CRST not ended conciliation, EEOC's conciliation efforts might have prevented her harassment. Investigation of her charge, filed after the date of the Determination, has been stayed by agreement of the parties pending the outcome of this lawsuit.

 In the "Dates complainant drove with alleged harasser" column, EEOC has provided the dates that the remaining allegedly aggrieved individuals drove with their alleged harasser(s) according to the "Trip Inquiry Reports" produced by CRST. The dates harassment is alleged to have occurred are within the ranges provided. Where an allegedly aggrieved individual alleges harassment by more than one person, the specific range the individual drove with each alleged harasser is provided. If the Court prefers that the parties attempt to provide more precise dates for when a woman claims the harassment took place within these periods for some or all the remaining allegedly aggrieved individuals, the parties will endeavor to provide the Court with additional information based on the undisputed summary judgment record and/or the discovery record.

Key to CRST's Comments:

1. EEOC admits that there was no independent investigation of this driver's claims prior to litigation, no independent reasonable cause determination at any time, and no offer of conciliation regarding her independent claims. CRST's comment 1 applies to all allegedly aggrieved drivers listed on the amended chart. EEOC's statements in its comments 1-5 about what it would have done or what would have occurred are speculative. EEOC's use of the term "class-wide" in its comments 2 and 3 is improper because EEOC failed to establish the existence of a "class."

2. CRST inquired after the litigation was filed about EEOC's position regarding pending charges. EEOC advised CRST that "the pending charges should be left open" but that "no attention needs to be given to them by [EEOC] enforcement staff, and that the process can be suspended." (CRST's Mot. for Order to Show Cause, Doc. No. 222-5, Ex. 3 (Mar. 4, 2008 e-mail from B. Tyndall to R. Markowski).)

3. Before the litigation was filed, EEOC made a determination with respect to this driver's claim that "it is unable to conclude that the information obtained establishes a violation of the statutes."

4. EEOC has admitted that this driver did not meet the severe or pervasive standard applicable to individual claims in the absence of a pattern or practice of harassment.

Re: Charge Number 260-2005-06856
Monika Starke vs. CRST International

Dear Ms. Bloomer:

I represent CRST International, Inc. in the above matter and write in response to your letter of July 12, 2007 (signed by John P. Rowe) in the above matter. I'm sorry it has taken me so long to respond; I've been in trial out of state for several weeks. My client is interested in conciliation. Please contact me to schedule the same. Thank you.

AUG 09 2007

Very truly yours,

MOYER & BERGMAN, P.L.C.

THE PARTICULARS ARE (If additional paper is needed, attach extra sheet(s)):

I. I was hired by the Respondent on June 22, 2005 in the position of Truck Driver. Since my employment began with the Respondent I have been subjected to sexual harassment on two occasions by my Lead Trainers. On July 7, 2005, Bob Smith, Lead Trainer began to make sexual remarks to me whenever he gave me instructions. He told me that the gear stick is not the penis of my husband, I don't have to touch the gear stick so often. "You got big tits for your size, etc..." I informed Bob Smith that I was not interested in a sexual relationship with him. On July 14, 2005, I contacted the dispatcher and was told that I could not get off the truck until the next day. On July 18, 2005 through August 3, 2005, David Goodman, Lead Trainer, forced me to have unwanted sex with him on several occasions while we were traveling in order to get a passing grade.

II. The Respondent did not state why I was subjected to sexual harassment which created a hostile work environment.

III. I believe that the Respondent discriminated against me on the basis of my sex (female) in that I was subjected to sexual harassment, in violation of the Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION

Charging Party: Monika Starke
Respondent: CRST
EEOC Charge No.. 260-2005-06856

1. Give the correct name and address of the facility named in the charge.

2. State the total number of persons who were employed by your organization during the relevant period. Include both full and part-time employees. How many employees are employed by your organization at the present time?

3. Supply an organizational chart, statement, or documents which describe your structure, indicating, if any, the relationship between it and superior and subordinate establishments within the organization.

4. Supply a statement or documents which identify the principal product or service of the named facility.

5. State the legal status of your organization, i.e., corporation, partnership, tax-exempt non-profit, etc. If incorporated, identify the state of incorporation.

6. State whether your organization has a contract with any agency of the federal government or is a subcontractor on a project which receives federal funding. Is your organization covered by the provisions of Executive Order 11246? If your answer is yes, has your organization been the subject of a compliance review by the OFCCP at any time during the past two years?

7 Submit a written position statement on each of the allegations of the charge, accompanied by documentary evidence and/or written statements, where appropriate. Also include any additional information and explanation you deem relevant to the charge.

8. Submit copies of all written rules, policies and procedures relating to the issue(s) raised in the charge. If such does not exist in written form, explain the rules, policies and procedures.

EEOC 1000548

Issue: HARASSMENT

1. State whether your organization has adopted any procedure by which an employee may register a complaint of harassment by co-workers or supervisors. If your answer is yes, describe and, if written, submit a copy of such procedures. Explain how these procedures are communicated to employees and supervisory personnel.

2. State whether the charging party complained to any supervisor or manager regarding the conduct described in the Charge of Discrimination. If your answer is yes, identify the person or persons with whom the complaint was registered and describe each and every action taken by your organization in response to that complaint. Provide a copy of any written document which reflects the complaint and the action taken as a result of the complaint.

3. State whether any other individual has complained to any supervisor or manager concerning the conduct described in the Charge of Discrimination. If the answer is yes, please list the following:

a. name, sex, position, of individual placing the complaint,
b. name, sex, position, of supervisor or manager, and
c. any actions taken by your organization in response to the complaint.

Provide a copy of any written document which reflects the complaint and the action taken as a result of the complaint.

4. Identify every individual who, to your knowledge, has information relevant to the allegations. For each such individual, provide the following:

a. name, sex, position,
b. whether a present or former employee (if applicable), and
c. address and telephone number.

5. Identify the other employees who worked with the charging party during the relevant period. Include:

a. name, sex, position,
b. last known address and telephone.

Submit copies of daily assignment sheets, time cards, attendance and payroll records for the individuals listed in #5, including the charging party.
